under this section and his right under S. 256 is that while his right to re-call and cross-examine prosecution witnesses under S. 256 is an absolute one, his right under this section is subject to the discretion of the Magistrate.² Where a prosecution witness is re-summoned under this section at the instance of the accused, he does not thereby lose his character as a prosecution witness and can be cross-examined by him.³ Where there are two accused in a case and their cases are adverse to each other, the witnesses called by one of the accused in his defence can be cross-examined by the other accused.⁴

7. Proviso to sub-section (1).— The first paragraph of sub-s.(1) provides inter alia that the accused is entitled to the issue of process for compelling the attendance of prosecution witnesses for cross-examination subject to the discretion of the Magistrate to refuse his application for process on the ground of its being made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. The proviso enacts an exception to this rule. It embodies a prohibition to the effect that if the accused has already cross-examined or has had the opportunity of cross-examining any witness after the charge was framed, the attendance of such witness should not be compelled except where it is necessary for the purposes of justice.¹ But where the accused has not had a sufficient opportunity of cross-examining

The proviso restricts only the issue of process for compelling the attendance of witnesses. 7a. Examination of witness present in Court though not summoned. — This section does not apply to the examination of a witness who is present in Court though not summoned. Such a witness can be examined by the Court under S. 540, but there is no obligation on the Court to examine him.¹

1. Legislative changes.

Difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872 —

The following explanation was added to S. 220 of the Code of 1872:

"If a charge is drawn up, the prisoner must either be acquitted or convicted. If no charge is drawn up, there can be no judgment of acquittal or conviction except in the case provided for in Explanation 1 to S. 216."

This gave legislative effect to the undermentioned decisions¹ under the Code of 1861.

Changes made in 1882 —

The explanation to S. 220 of the Code 1872 was omitted and the words "if in any case . . . framed" were introduced into the section.

Changes made by Act XVIII of 1923 —

The words "where in any case under this Chapter the Magistrate does not proceed in accordance with the provisions of section 349 or section 562" were added in sub-section (2).

2. "In which a charge has been framed." — In warrant-cases, an order of acquittal or conviction can be passed only after a charge has been framed:¹ But the mere fact that a charge has not been framed does not invalidate the proceedings unless a failure of justice has in fact been occasioned thereby.² See S. 535. Moreover, in warrant-cases tried summarily, S. 263 expressly dispenses with the framing of a formal charge, and the absence of a charge is no bar to an order of acquittal or conviction.³

6. (1900-02) 1 Low Bur Rul 9 (10), Queen-Empress v. Nga Po Lun.

The law contemplates that where there is a prima facie case against the accused, a charge should be framed and, if after taking the evidence for the defence after such charge it is found that the evidence is not sufficient to justify conviction, the accused should be acquitted. Hence it is most improper for a Magistrate to proceed without framing a charge and after taking all the evidence for the defence discharge the accused on finding that he cannot be convicted. Such a course is most unfair to the accused as it deprives him of the benefit of an acquittal to which he is rightfully entitled under the circumstances. The order of discharge in such a case virtually amounts to an acquittal and the Court of revision would not be justified in ordering further enquiry in such cases.⁴ See Notes under S. 436.

The section contemplates that the charge is subsisting at the time the order of acquittal is passed. If, therefore, by operation of law the charge is cancelled, as when a de novo trial is ordered under S. 350, the Magistrate is in the same position as if it had never been framed and, hence, cannot pass an order of acquittal.⁵

3. "The Magistrate finds the accused not guilty." — An order of acquittal can be recorded under this section only when the Magistrate finds the accused not guilty.¹ Thus, he cannot acquit the accused merely because the complainant or his witnesses are absent on the date of hearing² (see S. 259 and Notes thereunder) or because the complainant offers to withdraw his complaint.³ Similarly, where the Court finds that it has no jurisdiction to try the case, the proper order to pass is one of discharge and not of acquittal.^{3a} See Ss. 248 and 345 and Notes thereunder.

Under S. 254 a charge is to be framed only when the Magistrate finds that the prosecution has made out a prima facie case against the accused. But this does not mean that where a charge is framed, the Magistrate is bound to convict the accused merely because he fails to produce any evidence of rebuttal. Thus, he is bound to acquit if at the time of giving judgment he has reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused.⁴ As to appreciation of evidence in criminal cases, see the undermentioned cases.⁵

4. "He shall record an order of acquittal."—Once a charge is framed in a warrant-case the Magistrate has no power to discharge the accused.¹ He must either acquit the accused or convict him unless he decides to proceed under S. 349 or S. 562.

The proper order to pass under the section, if the Magistrate finds the accused not guilty, is to acquit the accused. An order dismissing the complaint or discharging the accused is not a proper order. But where such an order is passed and the meaning of the Magistrate is clear, the effect of the order is only that of acquittal.²

Under this section the Magistrate is bound to acquit the accused if he finds him not guilty. He cannot refer his case under S. 349 merely because there are other accused tried along with him who are, in the opinion of the Magistrate, guilty and whose case he decides to refer under section 349.³

Notes 1-2

1. Legislative changes.

Difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872 —

There was no corresponding provision in the Code of 1861.¹

But in practice it was held that if owing to the absence of the complainant the Magistrate was satisfied that no evidence was forthcoming against the accused, he might discharge him.²

The following explanation was added to S.215 of the Code of 1872 :

“Explanation I.—The absence of the complainant, except where the offence may be lawfully compounded, shall not be deemed sufficient ground for a discharge, if there appears other evidence sufficient to substantiate the offence.”

Changes made in 1882 —

Instead of the Explanation I to S.215 of the Code of 1872 a separate substantive section, viz., S. 259 was inserted in the Code. This section was in the same terms as that in the present Code.

Changes made in 1923 — The words “or is not a cognizable offence” were added, after the word “compounded” by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, XVIII of 1923.

2. Scope and applicability of the section. — This section is analogous to S.247. Both sections provide for the procedure to be followed in case of the absence of the complainant on the date of hearing. Section 247 applies to summons-cases while this section applies to warrant-cases. The points of distinction between the two sections are as follows :

- (1) Section 247 provides for the acquittal of the accused, while this section provides only for the discharge of the accused.¹
- (2) Section 247 makes it obligatory on the Magistrate to acquit the accused unless for some reason he thinks proper to adjourn the hearing to some other day, while this section leaves it to the discretion of the Magistrate to decide whether the accused should be discharged.

- (3) Section 247 applies to all offences triable as summons-cases, while this section applies only to such warrant-case offences as are either compoundable or non-cognizable.

Section 259

As said already, S. 247 applies to summons-cases, while this section applies to warrant-cases. The question arises as to what section applies to cases of a composite character involving both summons-case and warrant-case offences. In such cases, as has already been seen in Notes under S. 241, the procedure prescribed for warrant-cases should be followed and hence, it is this section and not S. 247 that will apply. Hence, in such cases the Magistrate cannot acquit the accused on the ground of the absence of the complainant on the date of hearing but must only discharge the accused under this section if the conditions laid down therein are present. See also notes under S. 247.

Section 253 also provides for the discharge of the accused in warrant-cases. But the grounds of discharge under that section are confined to cases where the Magistrate finds that the evidence for the prosecution does not make out a prima facie case against the accused or that the charge against the accused is groundless. There is no power under that section to discharge an accused on the ground that the complainant is absent on the date of hearing. An accused can be discharged on this ground only under this section, provided the other conditions for its applicability are fulfilled.²

The scope of the section has been enlarged by the insertion of the words "or is not a cognizable offence" by the amendments of 1923. The section as it stands applies not only to compoundable offences but also to offences which though not compoundable are non-cognizable.

3. "Instituted upon complaint."—The section applies only to cases where the proceedings have been instituted upon complaint. Hence, where the proceedings have not been instituted upon complaint, the Magistrate cannot invoke the provisions of this section for discharging the accused on the ground of the absence of the prosecuting officer on the date of hearing.¹

4. "Complainant is absent." — See Notes under Section 247.

5. Death of complainant. — See Note 6 to Section 247.

6. Withdrawal of complaint. — See Notes under Section 248.

7. "The offence may be lawfully compounded, or is not a cognizable offence." — As the section stood prior to the amendment of 1923, it applied only to cases where the offence charged was a compoundable one.¹ The scope of the section has now been enlarged by the addition of the words "or is not a cognizable offence" after the words "the offence may be lawfully compounded" in the section. The section therefore applies not only to cases where the offence is a compoundable one but also where though it is not compoundable, it is non-cognizable. Where the offence is neither compoundable nor non-cognizable, the section does not apply.² Where several offences are charged against the accused, it is necessary that all of them should be compoundable or non-cognizable in order that the section may apply.³

For the meaning of "cognizable," see S. 4 (1) clauses (f) and (n).

8. "May in his discretion."—Under this section the Magistrate is not bound to discharge the accused on the absence of the complainant on the date of hearing.¹ It only confers a discretion on the Magistrate to discharge the accused in the circumstances specified in it² and Magistrate should exercise such discretion only sparingly and discharge the accused.³ Where the presence of the complainant is not at all necessary for proceeding with the case, the Magistrate ought not to discharge the accused merely because of his absence.⁴ The Magistrate is bound to consider whether there is a prima facie case against the accused; and where there is no prima facie case, he will be justified in discharging the accused if the complainant absents himself on the date of hearing. But at the same time it must be remembered that the primary reason for a discharge under this section is the absence of the complainant which raises a presumption of his wish not to proceed with the case. Hence, where, despite the absence of the complainant, the circumstances are such as do not give rise to the inference that he did not wish to proceed with the case, the Magistrate ought not to

9. "At any time before the charge is framed." — This section only applies to cases where the complainant is absent on a day fixed for the hearing before the charge is framed. If the complainant absents himself after the charge is framed, the Magistrate has no power to discharge the accused on the ground of the absence of the complainant.¹ Nor can the accused be acquitted under S. 258 in such a case as an order of acquittal under that section can only be based on a finding of "not guilty" (see Notes under S. 258). The only course open to the Magistrate in such circumstances is to proceed with the case in the absence of the complainant² unless he decides to adjourn the case.³

10. Discharge the accused. — The procedure laid down in this section is to discharge the accused. Similarly there are other provisions in the Code under which the accused may be discharged. (See Ss. 209 and 253.) Under Ss. 203 and 204 the Magistrate can dismiss a complaint. But the Code nowhere provides for the passing of an order striking off a case, though such an order may, in suitable circumstances, be construed and treated as an order of discharge.¹

1. Legislative changes.

Difference between Codes of 1861 and 1872 —

There was no section corresponding to this in the Code of 1861.

Notes 1-2

The corresponding sections in the Code of 1872 were Ss. 222, 223 and 224.

Changes made in 1882 —

- (1) The offence referred to in clause (g) of the present section was added to the list of offences triable summarily under the section.
- (2) The proviso to sub-s.(1) of the present section was added, giving legislative effect to the undermentioned decision.¹
- (3) The words "and on conviction of the offender, may pass such sentence as may be lawfully inflicted under S. 20 (corresponding to S. 32 of the present Code) of this Code" which occurred in S. 222 of the prior Code were omitted and the second paragraph of S. 262 providing that in summary trials no sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding three months can be passed was added.

Changes made in 1898 —

The following additions were made :

- (1) The words "if he or they think fit."
- (2) Clause (e).
- (3) Clause (m). This gave legislative effect to the undermentioned decision² and rendered obsolete decision noted below.³
- (4) The words and figures "and offences under Ss. 451, 456 and 457 of the same Code" in clause (i).
- (5) Sub-section (2).

Changes made after 1898 —

By the Amending Act I of 1903 the offences under Ss. 453 and 454 of the Penal Code were added to the offences enumerated in clause (i) of sub-s.(1) thus rendering obsolete the undermentioned decision.⁴

2. Scope and object of the section.—This section and the next lay down the offences that can be tried summarily and the Magistrates by whom they can be so tried. While this section lays down the offences that can be tried in a summary way by District Magistrates, Magistrates of the first class and Benches of Magistrates with first class powers, the next section lays down the offences that can be tried summarily by Benches of Magistrates with second or third class powers. The procedure to be followed in summary trials is laid down in Ss. 262 to 265.

Under S. 262, sub-s.(2), it is provided that in case of conviction in summary trials the Magistrate cannot pass any sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding three months. Under section 414 a person convicted at a summary trial by a Magistrate empowered to try cases summarily has no right of appeal in any case where the sentence is one of fine not exceeding two hundred rupees only.

These sections apply to trials before Magistrates and Benches of Magistrates other than Presidency Magistrates. As regards summary

The object of this section and the sections following it in this chapter is to shorten the record and the work of the Magistrate in making the record; it is not intended to deprive the accused person of any of the rights under chapter XX or chapter XXI.¹

Notes 2-4

3. Magistrates empowered to try cases summarily. — The power to try cases summarily is confined to the Magistrates and Benches of Magistrates mentioned in this section and the next section. While the offences mentioned in this section can be tried by District Magistrates, Magistrates of the first class specially empowered in this behalf by the Provincial Government and Benches of Magistrates with first class powers specially empowered in this behalf by the Provincial Government, the offences mentioned in S. 261 can be tried by Benches of Magistrates with second or third class powers, specially empowered in this behalf by the Provincial Government.

As to the power of the District Magistrate of the Civil and Military Station of Bangalore to try European British subjects summarily, see the undermentioned case.¹

4. "May, if he or they think fit." — Under this section the Magistrate is not bound to adopt the summary procedure in the case of the offences mentioned in it. The section only confers a discretion to try such offences in a summary way if the Magistrate thinks fit to do so. In each case he ought to consider whether the summary procedure would be appropriate to the case. As a rule, such procedure should be confined to cases of a simple nature where not much evidence is needed.¹ The procedure is inappropriate to cases of a complicated or serious nature.² Thus, it would not be proper to try in a summary way cases which are hotly contested,³ cases involving intricate questions of title and possession⁴ and cases necessitating the taking of lengthy evidence⁵ or requiring a local inquiry to be made.⁶ Similarly, the summary procedure is inappropriate in warrant-cases in which the prosecution includes evidence given on commission in other presidencies, as the evidence so recorded militates in its very nature against the object of a trial by summary procedure.⁷ Where owing to the bulk of evidence or the complication of the matters or owing to the difficult nature of the points at issue, it is not possible for the Magistrate to keep in his mind, without taking exhaustive notes, the evidence of important facts, then, even though the offence may be technical and be punishable only with a light sentence, the Magistrate will not be acting properly if he applies the summary procedure.⁸ Similarly, serious cases, where a heavy sentence would be deserved in case of conviction, cannot appropriately be tried summarily.⁹ So also, cases where the result of the trial would have further consequences of a serious nature ought not to be tried in a summary way.¹⁰ For instance, cases against public servants in which the whole career of the accused would depend on the result of the trial should not be tried summarily.¹¹ Similarly, where the owner of a flour mill is prosecuted for public nuisance for starting the mill in a residential locality, he should not be tried summarily if the result of the trial would have the effect, in case of conviction, of compelling him to permanently close down his business.¹²

But the mere fact that there are a number of accused persons is not a conclusive reason against trying a case summarily.¹³

A summary trial is undesirable when a Magistrate takes cognizance of a case upon his own knowledge, as in such a case he is himself in the position of a prosecutor and it would not be proper for him to deal with the case in a summary way in such case.¹⁴

Where the accused is deaf and dumb, it has been held that the summary mode of trial is not suitable.¹⁵

5. Offences to which the section applies. — This section empowers certain Magistrates to try summarily the offences specified therein.¹ These offences are classified in clauses (a) to (m) of sub-s.(1) of the section. Clause (m) refers to offences under the Cattle Trespass Act. All the offences mentioned in clauses (b) to (l) are offences under the Penal Code. Clause (a) is general and applies to all offences whether under the Penal Code or other Acts. Hence, the section applies to offences under other Acts also, provided they are not offences punishable with death, transportation or imprisonment for a term exceeding six months.² The fact that several offences are charged against the accused does not make the section inapplicable where all the offences are triable summarily.³ But the summary procedure cannot be extended to offences not mentioned in the section.⁴ Thus, offences for which the maximum punishment awardable under the law exceeds the limits mentioned in clause (a) and which are not covered by any of the other clauses in sub-s.(1), cannot be tried summarily.⁵ Even the consent of the accused will not enable a Magistrate to try summarily an offence not covered by the section.⁶ Where there are several accused persons, the fact that the offence of which one of them is accused is not triable summarily, will make the summary procedure inapplicable to all the accused persons.⁷ Similarly, where a number of offences are charged against the accused person, he cannot be tried summarily unless all the offences are capable of being tried in a summary way.⁸

Section 260.
Note 5

S. 231 in determining whether the accused can be tried summarily, the value of the property to be taken into account under clause (f) of sub-s.(1) is the value of the property in respect of each offence separately and not the aggregate value of the property which is the subject-matter of all the offences.^{8a}

Clause (a) of the section does not control the other clauses of the sub-section. Hence, the offences mentioned in the other clauses can be tried summarily though they do not fall within the purview of clause (a).⁹

In determining whether a case relates to an offence triable summarily, a Magistrate should have regard primarily to the allegations with which his help is sought.¹⁰ Thus, in a large measure, where there is a complaint, the allegations in the complaint and the sworn statement of the complainant will determine the question of the applicability of the summary procedure. But the Magistrate is not absolutely confined to the complaint and the complainant's allegations. If there are good reasons for holding that the allegations are exaggerated, it is open to a Magistrate to go behind them and to try the accused for the offence which he holds that the circumstances of the case indicate to have been committed.¹¹ But where there are no good reasons for such a view, the Magistrate will not be justified in ignoring the aggravating features of a case so as to enable himself to adopt the summary procedure.¹²

Where the Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence on a police-report, he may ignore the allegations in the first information given in the police-station which point to aggravating circumstances and try the accused for the offence of which he is charged in the police-report, and if such offence is triable summarily, the Magistrate can adopt the summary procedure notwithstanding the allegations in the first information.¹³

Note 5

As to the procedure to be adopted in cases where in the course of a trial or inquiry commenced in the regular way it is found that the offence committed is triable as a summary case, see S. 251 Note 4.

As to whether the trial of an accused in a summary way for an offence which is not triable summarily is void under S. 530, clause (q), see Note 6 to S. 530.

The section applies only to trials for offences. It does not apply to proceedings which are not trials for offences. Thus, proceedings under chapter XXXVI (maintenance of wives and children) cannot be conducted in a summary way.¹⁵ Similarly, the inquiry made by a Magistrate under the first part of S. 2 of the Workman's Breach of Contract Act, XIII of 1859, is not a trial for an offence and such inquiry cannot be held in a summary manner.¹⁶ A contrary view, however, has been held by the Allahabad High Court.¹⁷

The section applies only to cases where the charge is exclusively for any of the offences mentioned in the section. Hence, where the accused, in case of conviction, would be liable to an enhanced punishment under S. 75 of the Penal Code by reason of a previous conviction and such conviction is set out in the charge as provided for in S. 221, the accused cannot be tried summarily although the trial may be for an offence mentioned in the section.¹⁸

The High Court as a superior Court of Record has a special jurisdiction to punish summarily contempts of its authority, and this jurisdiction is independent of, and unaffected by, the provisions of the Code.¹⁹

Under section 67 of the Forest Act of 1927 it is provided that the Magistrates of the classes mentioned therein can try summarily offences of the kind specified in the section.²⁰

Section 260
Note 6

6. Sub-section (2).— This sub-section provides for the procedure to be followed in cases in which in the course of a summary trial the Magistrate comes to the conclusion that the case ought not to be tried in a summary way. The Code does not contain any express provision for the procedure to be followed in cases in which in the course of a regular trial the Magistrate finds that the case may be tried summarily. The question arises whether in such circumstances the Magistrate is at liberty to change his procedure to that of a summary trial. As to this, see S. 251 Note 4.

1. Legislative changes.

Difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872 —

There was no corresponding section in the Code of 1861. The corresponding section in the Code of 1872 was S. 226.

Changes made in 1882 —

The second paragraph was added. At the same time the provision in S. 222 of the prior Code authorizing the infliction in summary trials of any sentence that might be lawfully passed under S. 20 of the Code (corresponding to S. 32 of the present Code) was omitted.

2. Procedure to be followed in summary trials. — This section and the following three sections provide for the procedure to be followed in summary trials. Offences that can be tried summarily comprise both summons-cases and warrant-cases. This section provides that in the summary trial of summons-cases the procedure to be followed is that of summons-cases and in the summary trial of warrant-cases the procedure to be followed is that of warrant-cases, except as otherwise provided in the chapter. In other words, the procedure to be followed in summary trials is the same as that provided for ordinary trials except as otherwise prescribed. Such exceptions are provided in sub-s. (2) of this section and in ss. 263 and 264.

Where there is no provision for the departure from the ordinary procedure, such procedure should be followed in summary trials as strictly as in ordinary trials. Thus, proceedings in summary trials as in ordinary trials should commence with the issue of a summons or warrant for the appearance of the accused.¹ Similarly, the following provisions apply to summary trials equally with ordinary trials : S. 191,^{1a} S. 243,² S. 257,³ S. 342⁴ and S. 250.⁵

As to the applicability of S. 256 to warrant-cases, see S. 256 Note 2.

Even in cases where a departure from the ordinary procedure is provided for, Magistrates should be careful not to exceed the limits upto which such departure is allowed and they should follow strictly any special procedure that may be provided for summary trials in such cases. Thus, S. 263 dispenses with the recording of evidence and the drawing up of a formal charge, but requires the Magistrate to draw up a statement giving the particulars mentioned in the section. Magistrates should be careful to prepare this statement as required by the section.⁶ Similarly, in appealable cases, it is provided that a judgment containing the particulars mentioned in S. 264 should be drawn up. An omission to comply with this requirement will be an irregularity in the trial.⁷

3. Sentence that can be passed in summary trials — Sub-section (2). — This sub-section prohibits the infliction in summary trials of a sentence of imprisonment for any term exceeding three months.¹ The object of the section is to restrict the passing of sentences of imprisonment of considerable length in a summary trial from a conviction in which the right of appeal is greatly restricted.²

Where an accused is convicted of a number of offences in a summary trial, a separate sentence must be passed in respect of each offence³ (as in any other mode of trial). But it has been held that where in such a case the accused is sentenced to imprisonment for a term of three months in respect of each offence, the sentences must be ordered to run concurrently and not consecutively, as otherwise the object of the section will be defeated.⁴

Where a case is tried summarily and referred to a superior Magistrate under S.349, the mere fact of such a reference being made does not make the trial other than a summary one and the Magistrate to whom the case is referred, if he does not try the case anew in any way as he is authorized to do under S.349, cannot pass any sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding the three months' period mentioned in this section.⁵

But the prohibition applies only to substantive sentences of imprisonment.⁶ Hence, where imprisonment is ordered in default of the payment of fine, the term for which such imprisonment is ordered may exceed the limits imposed by this section.⁷ So also, this section will not render illegal a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine merely by reason of the fact that the aggregate of the terms of substantive sentence of imprisonment and of the sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine exceeds three months or by reason of the Magistrate having passed a substantive sentence of imprisonment for the maximum term allowed by the section.⁸ Similarly, the jurisdiction of a Magistrate to order security for keeping the peace in cases coming under S.106 is not affected by this section⁹ and where such security is ordered, the power to commit to prison in default of furnishing the security under S.123 is again unaffected by this section.¹⁰

The section only restricts the term, for which a sentence of imprisonment can be passed; it does not set any limits to the amount

Section 263
Notes 1-2

1. Legislative changes. — The words “nor the reasons for passing the judgment” occurring in the Code of 1872 after the words “need not record the evidence of the witnesses” have been omitted in the subsequent Codes.

The following words were for the first time introduced in the Code of 1892 —

- (a) “and in cases coming under clause (d), clause (e) or clause (f) of S. 260 has been committed” in clause (f);
- (b) “and his examination if any” in clause (g);
- (c) “or other final order” in clause (i).

Code of 1898 — The words “or clause (g) of sub-s.(1)” were added.

2. Scope and applicability of the section. — It has been seen under S. 262 that the procedure to be followed in summary trials is the same as that in ordinary trials except as otherwise provided. This section provides for some of the matters in respect of which the ordinary procedure may be departed from in summary trials. It provides that in such trials the evidence of witnesses need not be recorded and that no formal charge is necessary; but that the Magistrate or Bench of Magistrates, as the case may be, should enter in the prescribed form the particulars mentioned in the section. But the form prescribed under the section will not be the only record of the case for all purposes.¹

The section applies only to cases in which no appeal lies.² The procedure applicable to cases in which an appeal lies is provided for in section 264.

That section provides that in appealable cases in summary trials a judgment should be prepared containing the particulars mentioned in this section and the substance of the evidence and that such judgment shall be the only record in cases coming under that section. The question has arisen whether the exemption from recording the evidence of witnesses for which express provision is made in this section applies in cases coming under S. 264 also. As to this, see Notes under section 264.

It has been seen in the Notes under S. 262 that, except in regard to matters for which a different procedure is prescribed or permitted for summary trials, it is the duty of the Magistrate in such trials to follow the rules of ordinary procedure as strictly as in ordinary trials. Thus, though this section dispenses with the recording of evidence, it does not dispense with the hearing of evidence and a finding in a summary trial which is based on a refusal or failure to hear evidence is as much liable to be upset as a finding in an ordinary trial which is assailable on a similar ground.³

This section and the other sections in this chapter refer only to the summary procedure in trials before Magistrates and Benches of Magistrates other than Presidency Magistrates. As to summary procedure in trials before Presidency Magistrates, see S. 362, sub-s.(4), section 370 and section 441.

There being so little to be recorded under this section and consequently there being so little protection from without to the accused against the risk of error, haste or inaccuracy, the scanty provisions of this section must be strictly complied with and the record must be sufficiently exact and full to enable the revisional Court to say whether the law has been complied with or not on the points to be recorded.⁴

See also Notes under S.262.

3. "The Magistrate or Bench of Magistrates need not record the evidence of the witnesses." — This section exempts the Magistrate or Bench of Magistrates holding a summary trial from recording the evidence of witnesses as in ordinary trials.¹ The contrary view² is against the express provisions of this section and S. 354 and cannot be supported.

Although the Magistrate or Bench of Magistrates trying a case summarily is not bound to record the evidence of witnesses, such recording of evidence is not prohibited and in cases of importance, it has been held that Magistrates would do well to record the evidence.³ The Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court has held that evidence so recorded will not form part of the record.^{3a}

Note 3 .

Moreover, Magistrates in such cases may take notes of the evidence for their own information and use and it has been laid down that where a case is likely to be adjourned to a long date, the Magistrate ought to take such notes.⁴ The question arises as to whether such notes of evidence, where they are taken, form part of the record or are the private property of the Magistrate which he can destroy at his option. On this question there is a conflict of decisions. On the one hand, it has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad,⁵ Bombay⁶ and Rangoon,⁷ the Chief Court of Oudh⁸ and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind,⁹ that such notes do not form part of the record and can be destroyed by the Magistrate at his option. But on the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta¹⁰ and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur¹¹ that such notes form part of the record and cannot be destroyed by the Magistrate. In the undermentioned case¹² it has been held that the failure of the Magistrate to sign the memorandum of evidence, assuming that the Magistrate is bound to make such memorandum, is not by itself sufficient to vitiate the trial and conviction. Section 263

This section applies only to cases where no appeal lies. As to the question whether in cases in which an appeal lies the Magistrate is bound to record the evidence as in ordinary trials, see Notes under section 264.

4. "He or they shall enter . . . particulars." — This section requires the Court in a summary trial to prepare a record in the form that may be prescribed by the Provincial Government containing the various particulars mentioned in clauses (a) to (j) of the section. By implication this dispenses with the recording of a judgment in the form laid down by S. 867.¹ But the record prescribed by this section must be prepared scrupulously and carefully and must be complete in all the particulars specified in the section.² The particulars must be recorded in separate columns; lumping together in the same column all the particulars is not proper.³ The record must be prepared at the time of the trial; its preparation after the close of the trial is not sufficient.⁴ Further, the record must be prepared by the presiding officer of the Court itself. Except in cases where he is authorized to use the services of an officer appointed for the purpose under S. 265, sub-s.(2), he cannot depute a clerk to prepare the record.⁵

But the failure of the Magistrate to prepare the record as required by this section will not by itself justify the quashing of the conviction unless it has caused prejudice or occasioned failure of justice. Thus, where a Magistrate failed to enter the date of the commission of the offence, it was held that the conviction could not be set aside unless it was shown that the defect had led or could possibly have led to any prejudice or failure of justice.⁶

The register prepared under this section forms part of the record and under S. 548 the accused is entitled to copies of it if he applies for them.⁷

5. Clause (f)—Particulars of offence charged and proved.

— Though this section dispenses with the framing of a formal charge in cases coming under it, the record prepared under the section must specify both the offence complained of and proved.¹ The accused is entitled to know clearly the offence with which he is charged to the same extent as in ordinary trials.² The record must show that the accused was not in any way prejudiced in this respect. The specification of the offence in the record should be sufficiently full and clear to give the accused sufficient notice of what he is charged with and what he has to meet.³ The principles in conformity with which charges must be framed in warrant-cases apply to the particulars to be recorded under this section.⁴ The mere mention of the section under which the accused is charged is not enough.⁵ Similarly, the prohibition of misjoinder of charges applies to summary trials as well as to ordinary trials and the record must show that there was no misjoinder.⁶ Where there are several accused the offences charged against each should be distinctly stated.⁷

Where the offence complained of is an offence of theft or other offence falling under clauses (d) to (g) of sub-s.(1) of S. 260, the value of the property in respect of which the offence was committed must also be specified in the record in order to make it clear that the offence was one which could be tried in a summary way.⁸ But the mere failure to do so is not sufficient to raise any question of possible or probable prejudice or failure of justice, so as to warrant the setting aside of the conviction unless it is shown that there was a real defect of jurisdiction by reason of the property exceeding Rs. 50 in value.⁹

6. Clause (g) — Plea of accused and his examination (if any). — The record should contain the plea of the accused and

Section 263.
Note 7

Section 441 provides that when the record of the proceeding of any Presidency Magistrate is called for by the High Court under section 435, he may submit a written statement of the grounds of his decision and that the High Court should consider such statement before upsetting his decision. There is no such provision in the case of other Magistrates and so, when the reasons for conviction are not recorded as required by this section and the matter goes up before a Court of revision, the lower Court cannot send any written statement of reasons for its decision for the consideration of the Court of revision.⁸

The section requires reasons to be recorded only in case of conviction; no reasons need be recorded for an *acquittal*⁹ or a sentence.¹⁰

deposition need not be recorded, but only the substance of the evidence as a whole need be given.² But, it is not sufficient compliance with the law to state that "the witnesses for the prosecution support the statement of the complainant" and "the statement of the witnesses examined by the accused is very conflicting."³ Further, it must be remembered that the substance of the evidence is a matter quite distinct from the facts which may be considered as proved by the evidence. Hence, a mere statement of the facts which the evidence of certain witnesses is considered to have proved is not sufficient.^{3a} The substance must be stated plainly and must not be left to be deduced by inference.^{3b} The substance of the evidence should be so recorded as to enable the appellate Court to judge if there are sufficient materials for the decision.⁴

The failure to set forth the substance of the evidence is fatal to the case⁵ because it prejudices the accused in that it prevents the proper disposal of the appeal that he is enabled to make.⁶

Sub-section (2)—"Such judgment shall be the only record in cases coming within this section."—Section 263 expressly provides that in cases coming under that section it is not necessary to record the evidence of witnesses or frame a formal charge. aforesaid record or judgment by means of an officer appointed in this behalf by the Court to which such Bench is immediately subordinate, and the record or judgment so prepared shall be signed by each member of such Bench present taking part in the proceedings.

(3) If no such authorization be given, the record prepared by a member of the Bench and signed as aforesaid shall be the proper record.

(4) If the Bench differ in opinion, any dissentient member may write a separate judgment.

a. Substituted by A. O. for "Local Government."

1. Legislative changes. — Sub-sections (3) and (4) were newly added in the Code of 1898.

2. "Shall be written by the presiding officer." — This section provides that the record or the judgment in summary trials should be written by the presiding officer. The preparation of such record is thus the duty of the Magistrate himself and he cannot depute a clerk to do it.¹ But in cases falling under sub-s.(2) the record or judgment may be prepared by the officer appointed for the purpose under it, and the members of the Bench trying the case may sign the record or judgment so prepared. Where a case is tried by a Bench of Magistrates, it has been held that the record or judgment ought to be prepared in the presence of all the Magistrates forming the Bench and they must all be aware of their contents and approve of them, even though the formal pronouncement of the same may be left to be made by the Chairman of the Bench in their absence. Therefore, a record or judgment prepared by the Chairman in the absence of the other Magistrates is not valid in law, even though the others may have concurred in the decision.²

3. Signature on judgment or record. — The requirements of public policy necessitate the writing of the full name of the Magistrate who signs the judgment and the mere putting in of the initials is not a sufficient compliance with the law. Therefore, where one of the three members of a Bench trying a case summarily merely initials the judgment instead of signing his full name in it, he cannot be held to have 'signed' the judgment as required by the section.¹ As to whether such initialling instead of signing the full name amounts to an illegality or a mere irregularity within the meaning of S. 537, see Notes to S. 537. The signature should be made with a pen and not with a stamp.³

Section 367 provides that a judgment should be signed by the presiding officer of the Court. Where a case is tried summarily by a Bench of Magistrates, it is provided by sub-s.(3) of this section that the judgment or record prepared by a member of the Bench should be signed by every member of the Bench. Where the judgment or record is prepared by the Chairman of the Bench, will the signature of the Chairman alone be sufficient as that of the "presiding officer" under S. 367 or is it necessary that the record or judgment should be signed by each of the other members of the Bench also? On this question it has been held by the High Court of Madras that the words "the presiding officer of the Court" in S. 367 are no more than a compendious description of all classes of judicial officers, Magistrates and Judges who have to pronounce judgments, that they do not afford any assistance in the construction of this section and that the intention of this section is that by whomsoever the record or judgment is written, it should be signed by all the members present. Hence, the fact that the record or judgment has been written and signed by the Chairman of a Bench does not dispense with the signatures of the other members of the Bench.³ See also Note 3 to S. 367.

Where copies are furnished to the parties of the judgment or record, the copy should contain a copy of the signature of all the members of the Bench who signed the original. A copy, wherein is given the signature of only the Chairman of the Bench, is incorrect and defective.⁴

Synopsis

1. Legislative changes.
2. Scope and applicability of the section.
3. "High Court."
4. Judicial Commissioner.

1. Legislative changes (omitted)

2. Scope and applicability of the section. — This chapter deals with the procedure to be adopted by a Court of Session or a High Court in the trial of cases committed to it under chapter XVIII of the Code. The language of Ss. 193 and 194 implies that this chapter has reference only to cases committed to a Court of Session. It would appear, therefore, that the procedure laid down in this chapter was not intended to be applicable to the trial of such exceptional cases as a Court of Session or a High Court may take cognizance of, otherwise than on commitment as provided for in Ss. 193 and 194.

The material distinction between a trial held by a Magistrate and a trial under this chapter is that while in the former the right and duty to decide a case rests solely in the Magistrate, in trials under this chapter the Judge is bound by the verdict of a jury or to consider the opinion of assessors, as the case may be.

Section 14 of the Indian Criminal Law Amendment Act, XIV of 1908, makes the provisions of the chapter applicable, subject to certain prescribed conditions, to trials before the special tribunals constituted under the said Act.

3. "High Court." — The expression "High Court" is defined in S. 4 (1) (j) of the Code. But that definition is subject to the provision in S. 266 giving the expression a different meaning for certain purposes.

A High Court exercising original criminal jurisdiction is not a Sessions Court within the meaning of the Code.¹

4. Judicial Commissioner. — The effect of the definition of "High Court" in this section is not to confer the status of a High Court on Courts which are not statutory High Courts, but is only to extend to such Courts the procedure applicable to statutory High Courts, in the trial of sessions cases. The Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind, for example, is in its constitution a Sessions Court under S.1A of the Sind Courts Act, XII of 1866. But in the trial of sessions cases it is deemed to be a High Court to the extent prescribed in this section.¹ As such, when a Judicial Commissioner of that Court in a sessions trial disagrees with the verdict of the jury, the procedure to be adopted is that of a High Court as provided in S.305 of this chapter and the Judge has no power of reference under S.307.² The Court of a Judicial Commissioner, as for example of Sind, is a High Court only for the purposes of chapter XXIII (and of chapter XVIII) and remains a Sessions Court for other purposes notwithstanding S.266, and an appeal lies under S.418 of the Code from the decision of a Judge of that Court in a sessions trial.³ Under Bombay Act, VII of 1926, which came into force from the 15th April of 1940,⁴ the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court has become the Chief Court of Sind. The Sind Courts Act, XII of 1866 has been repealed by the above Act, but under S.8 thereof, the Chief Court of Sind continues to be a Court of Session. So, the above principles will apply also in the case of the Chief Court of Sind.

the issue.¹ The system of trial by jury in England is based on the common law and on the constitutional principle that every person is entitled to demand that he be not restrained of his liberty except per legale iudicium parium suorum vel per legem terræ, so that trial by jury is the rule except in particular cases. In this country, there is no such inalienable right to be tried by jury.² It is only a creation of statute³ and is simply a mode of trial prescribed by the legislature in certain cases.⁴ The verdict of the jury in India has, therefore, not got the same sacrosanct character as it has in England, and repugnancy in the verdict is not in itself sufficient to justify the quashing of a conviction based on such verdict.⁵

2. Criminal cases transferred to the High Court under this Code.—Where a criminal case is transferred to the High Court, and there is no order under the section that it should be tried by jury, the trial will be by assessors if that is the mode of trial prescribed in the Court from which the case is transferred.

See sections 449 and 526. ^e

3. Transfer under Letters Patent.—See Clause 29 of the Letters Patent (Madras, Bombay and Calcutta) and the corresponding clause of the Letters Patent for the other High Courts.

Notes 1-2

2. "With the aid of assessors." — In cases triable with the aid of assessors it is mandatory that the trial should commence with the requisite number of competent assessors under S. 284, but where in the course of the trial some of them are unable to attend, the trial may proceed with the aid of the other assessors: see S. 285.

The jurisdiction of the Sessions Judge to commence his trial and his jurisdiction to continue the trial are dependent upon his choosing the requisite number of competent assessors to aid him and on the continuation of at least one of them throughout the trial. Any finding or sentence passed by a Sessions Judge in contravention of these requisites will not be one passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction.¹ The defect is not one which can be cured by S. 537.²

The scheme of the Code shows that in the view of the Legislature it is less advantageous to an accused to be tried with the aid of assessors than by a jury.³

3. Position of the jury and of the assessors.—The jury form a tribunal or body with a foreman and their verdict is the verdict of the body, or where there is no unanimity, of the majority (S.301). In cases tried by jury, the jury is the real tribunal but is aided by the Judge and in certain matters directed by the Judge.¹ They are invested with a special status and given special powers and the ultimate responsibility for all decisions within their sphere is meant to be theirs and theirs alone.²

The assessors, on the other hand, do not form a body, but each acts and expresses his opinion individually. They are only to assist the Judge and take no part in the judgment. The Judge is the sole judge of law and fact and the responsibility for the decision rests only with him.³ Thus an assessor does not form an essential part of the Sessions Court.⁴

As a juror stands on a higher footing, speaks with greater authority and takes a larger share in the decision of a criminal case than does an assessor, it may be taken as axiomatic that in the absence of a specific prohibition, an objection that could not be upheld regarding a juror would be ruled out in the case of an assessor.⁵

In trials by jury the judge is bound to sum up the whole case to the jury and record their verdict (S. 297), while in trials with the aid of assessors, the judge may sum up the case and should record their opinion (S. 309).⁶

An appeal in a case tried by jury will lie on a matter of law only while, an appeal in a case tried with the aid of assessors will lie on a matter of fact as well as on a matter of law (S. 418).

4. Recording evidence in the absence of jurors or assessors.
— A Court of Session is authorized to record evidence in the absence of the jury or assessors only when additional evidence is called for by the appellate Court under S.428, sub-s.(3) or by the High Court under S.375, sub-s.(2). Hence, a Court has no jurisdiction to record material evidence after the discharge of the assessors.¹ This view has been

1. Legislative changes. — There is no material difference between S.322 of the Code of 1861 and S.233 of the Code of 1872.

Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882 —

A new paragraph was added in S.269 of the Code of 1882 to the effect that where the accused was charged with several offences some of which were and some were not triable by jury, he should be tried by jury for all such offences.¹

Difference between the Codes of 1882 and 1898 —

- (1) Sub-section (2) of the present section is new.
- (2) The words "he shall be tried jury" in sub-s.(3) have been substituted for the words "he shall be tried by jury for all such offences" which occurred in the old Code.

Changes made in the Code of 1898 —

- (1) The words "with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council" occurring after the words "Local Government may" were repealed by the Devolution Act, XXXVIII of 1920.
- (2) The words "with the like sanction" occurring between the words "may" and "revoke" in sub-s.(1) were repealed by the Repealing and Amending Act, X of 1927.

2. Scope of the section.—This section empowers the Provincial Government to direct by order in the Official Gazette that the trial of all offences or of any particular class of offences before any Court of Session shall be by jury. As has been seen in the Notes to S.267 there is no such inalienable right to be tried by jury as exists under the common law of England. This section, therefore, limiting the right of trial by jury to the cases notified by the Provincial Government under this section and impliedly negating such a right in other criminal cases is intra vires of the Indian Legislature and does not offend against S.22 of the Indian Council's Act, 1861.¹

The power of the Provincial Government under this section is not limited to merely adding a jury to the Court of Session. The plain wording of the section implies that the offences must be triable before the Court of Session and does not derogate from the power otherwise given to the Provincial Government to prescribe which offences should not come before the Court of Session. Thus, the section cannot be interpreted in such a way as to invest the Provincial Government with the power to direct that all or any class of offences not punishable with death shall be tried by jury before the Sessions Court, and not by Magistrates invested with power under S. 30.²

See also the undermentioned case.³

3. "Trial of shall be by jury in any district."—Where any district in a division in which the Provincial Government has directed that the trial of certain offences shall be by jury, ceases to belong to such division, the right of trial by jury for such offences also ceases in that district.¹

The words "trial of in any district" mean that the trial shall be by jury in any district when so ordered by a notification and not that the trial shall be by jury of offences committed in any district. There is not only no prohibition against the trial being otherwise than by jury in a district not affected by a notification under this section,² but in view of S. 268, a trial in a Court of Session must, in the absence of a notification under this section, be with the aid of assessors.³ But a trial by jury in a case which is triable by the judge with the aid of assessors is not invalid merely on that ground. Nor is a trial with assessors in a case triable by jury invalid unless objection is taken for such trial before the Court records its finding. See section 536.

When a person is charged with an offence triable by the Judge with the aid of assessors and is tried accordingly but the assessors express the opinion that he is not guilty of the offence charged but guilty in respect of a minor offence with which he was not charged, a conviction on the opinion of the assessors for such minor offence is not invalid, even though such minor offence is triable by jury.⁴

Conversely, where an accused is charged with an offence triable by a jury and is accordingly tried by a jury, the latter has power under S. 238 to find the accused guilty of a minor offence not included in the charge though such offence is not triable by a jury but is triable with the aid of assessors.⁵

Where an offence which is not triable by a jury is tried by a jury as a matter of fact, the trial does not become other than one by a jury for purposes of appeal and an appeal is competent under S. 418, only on a matter of law.⁶ In such a case, it is not also open to the Judge to treat the verdict of the jury as the opinion of the assessors.^{6a}

The powers of transfer conferred on the High Court under S. 526 are not in any way limited or controlled by this section. Hence, the trial of an offence which would in the ordinary course be by jury in a particular district, may be transferred to another district where it would be held with the aid of assessors only.⁷

4. Trial for substantive offence read with section 149 of the Penal Code. — Where the offence under S. 325 of the Penal Code was triable by jury, but all offences of rioting were excluded from jury trial and a person was charged under Ss. 325 and 149 by reason of his being a member of an unlawful assembly, it was held by the High Court of Allahabad that the essential part of the offence was rioting and not the offence under S. 325 and that, therefore, the offence charged should be tried by the Judge with the aid of assessors.¹ On the other hand, the High Court of Patna has held that, in all cases in which an accused is charged with an offence triable by jury read with S. 149 of the Penal Code, the Court must always first determine whether the particular offence has been committed by an individual and next whether S. 149 makes the accused responsible as a participator, and that, therefore, if the particular offence is triable by jury, such offence read with S. 149 must also be triable by jury.² It is submitted that the latter view is correct.

5. "Or of any particular class of offences." — The words "class of offences" are not restricted to any classification recognized by the Legislature such as is found in the Penal Code (e. g., offences against the State or against the person), or in the Criminal Procedure Code (e. g., bailable offences, cognizable offences). It may include a classification according to the persons who commit the offences, or in regard to the

6. Special jury list — Sub-section (2). — See Section 325.

7. Charge for offences, some triable by jury and others with assessors — Sub-section (3). — There was no provision corresponding to this sub-section in the Codes of 1861 and 1872, but as a matter of practice, a procedure similar to that contemplated by this sub-section was followed, where at the same trial an accused was charged with offences some of which were triable by jury and others by the Judge with the aid of assessors.¹ In the Code of 1882 it was, however, enacted that, in such cases the accused should be tried for all the offences only by jury. The present sub-s.(3) directs that the jury should themselves act as assessors in respect of the offences triable with the aid of assessors² and has thus given effect to the view that had been held before the Code of 1882. But the system has often been found fault with as leading to unsatisfactory and anomalous results.³

A joint trial for different offences, some of which are and others are not triable by jury, is not illegal.⁴ In fact, the procedure, at the trial, for both classes of offences (i. e., those triable by jury and those with assessors) is the same, up to the point of summing up.⁵ Where the charge to the jury is combined with the summing up to the jurors as assessors, the Judge should clearly explain to the jurors the double capacity of jurors and assessors in which they are acting.⁶ The Judge should take the verdict of the jury in respect of the offences triable by jury and the opinion of the jurors as assessors in respect of the other offences charged. He should not take the verdict of the jury as jurors in respect of the latter offences.⁷ In Mavsing Bechar v. Emperor,⁸ Chandavarkar, J., observed as follows :

"The law makes no distinction as to the procedure at the trial between a trial by a jury and one with the aid of assessors except as to the summing up in the case of the former and the manner in which the verdict in the former and the opinions of the assessors in the latter are respectively taken. It is at this latter point that there is a departure of ways, and if the accused who is tried does not intervene at that crucial point, and get the procedure applicable to trials with the aid of assessors enforced, he cannot be heard to complain."

Where a verdict is given by the jury in respect of the offences triable by jury and an opinion is given by them as assessors in respect of the other offences, the Judge should in respect of the verdict follow the procedure laid down in Ss. 306 and 307, and in respect of the opinions, the procedure laid down in S. 309.⁹ Where the jury gave a verdict of not guilty in respect of the offences triable by jury and expressed a similar opinion as assessors in respect of the other offences charged, whereupon the Judge disagreeing with the opinion of the assessors convicted the accused in respect of the latter charges, and in the interests of justice made also a reference under S. 307 in respect of the verdict, it was held that the procedure followed by the Judge was correct and that he was not bound to wait before convicting on the latter charges, till the reference to the High Court was answered.¹⁰ Where the conviction for the offences triable by jury is set aside owing to certain defect in the verdict, it does not follow as a necessary consequence that the conviction for the other offences for which the accused

Where an accused is charged with a number of offences some of which are triable by a jury and some by the Judge with the aid of assessors, but the Judge fails to follow the procedure laid down in sub-s.(3) and all the offences are tried by the jury, the irregularity in the procedure does not make the trial illegal or other than a trial by jury.¹² Conversely, where an accused is charged with a number of offences which are all triable by jury but the Judge thinking that some of the offences are triable with the aid of assessors, follows the procedure laid down in this sub-section and no objection is taken to such a procedure, the legality of the trial is saved by S. 536 (2).¹³

The sub-section only applies to cases where a person is charged with offences triable by a jury as well as those triable with the aid of assessors. It does not apply to a case where the accused is only charged with an offence triable by a jury but subsequently it is found on the evidence that he has committed a different offence which is triable with the aid of assessors.¹⁴ Nor does it apply to a case where none of the accused persons is charged with more than one offence. Thus, where one of the accused is charged with murder, an offence triable by jury, and the other is charged with conspiracy to murder, an offence triable with the aid of assessors, the section does not apply and a joint trial of the two accused is bad.¹⁵

The provisions of this sub-section may be followed where the accused is charged with an offence triable by a jury and in the alternative with an offence triable with the aid of assessors.¹⁶

But the sub-section does not apply merely because an offence triable by a jury is included in an offence triable with the aid of assessors or vice versa, where only one of the offences is actually charged.¹⁷

8. "Same trial." — Where, in the same trial a person is tried by a jury and there is also another charge tried by the Judge with the jurors as assessors, there is a right of appeal from the conviction on the latter charge under S. 410 of the Code. The words "same trial" in sub-s.(3) must be read in a distributive sense and cannot be read as taking away the right of appeal.¹

9. Judgment in cases tried under sub-section (3). — Where the procedure laid down in sub-s.(3) of the section was followed and the Judge stated both cases for the benefit of the jury and his summing up covered both the charges, it was held that the failure to write a separate judgment in respect of the charges triable with the aid of assessors did not vitiate the trial.¹

10. "With the aid of the jurors as assessors." — A person charged with distinct offences some of which are triable by jury and others by the Judge with assessors, is entitled under sub-s.(3) to be tried for the latter offences, by the Judge with all the jurors as assessors. A trial with some of the jurors alone as assessors would be illegal.¹

1. Scope of the section. — This section and the next contain all that is necessary as to pleading and there is no need to supplement their contents by a reference to any other system of jurisprudence. Under this section the accused can plead guilty or claim to be tried or he can refuse to plead which is taken to be the same as claiming to be tried.¹

2. "Commencement of proceedings." — As to when the trial before a High Court or Court of Session begins, see S. 4 (1) (k), Note 4 and the undermentioned case.¹

3. "The accused shall appear or be brought." — As a general rule a person should be relieved of his chains when brought before a Court for trial or as a witness. There can be no question that the display of fetters must have a prejudicial effect against him in the eyes of jurors or assessors. The exception to this rule should be when the superintendent or the keeper of the jail certifies that the use of the chain is necessary to guard against violence or an attempt to escape. But the Judge cannot refuse to try an accused brought in fetters though he can direct the removal of the same.¹

4. "And the charge shall be read out in Court and explained to him." — The actual charge sheet is an important document, and should be drawn up with care and caution so that the accused may have no doubt-whatsoever as to the offences which he is called upon to answer. When a record is prepared for an appeal, it should be seen whether there is on the record a charge which has been read and explained to the accused and if it is absent the reason therefor should be ascertained.¹ A mere reading out of the charge is not enough; it should be explained to the accused² and the record should show that the charge has been read out and explained to the accused.³ Where a deaf and dumb person was convicted of an offence upon a trial without an attempt to communicate with him respecting the charge against him, the conviction was set aside.⁴ But where the accused is defended by a counsel and the charge is read out and the counsel does not object, the omission to explain is only an irregularity if it has not caused any prejudice to the accused, and is cured by S. 537.⁵

Before reading out the charge, the Judge should scrutinize the charge as to whether it requires any amendment before the accused is called on to plead thereto.⁶

5. "He shall be asked whether he is guilty."—The Court is bound to ask the accused whether he is guilty of the offence charged or claims to be tried. A conviction cannot be supported where the accused has not been asked whether he is guilty or claims to be tried.¹

An accused person should not, however, be encouraged to plead guilty in the hope of receiving a lenient punishment.²

If, before the commencement of the proceedings, the Judge considers that there is no evidence to warrant a commitment, he should refer the case to the High Court for getting the commitment quashed under S. 215.³

An objection as to jurisdiction of the Court to try the case should be taken before the plea is taken and the jury sworn.⁴

6. Alternative charges.—An accused should never be called on to plead in the alternative but only separately as to each of the heads of a charge.¹

7. "If the accused pleads guilty."—In order to see whether the accused has pleaded guilty or not, the whole and not merely a part of his statement should be considered.¹ There are no pleadings in a Criminal Court and an accused person cannot be judged in a criminal case, by how he pleads or fails to plead in the proceeding.^{1a}

A plea of guilty on which the Court can act must be a plea of guilty of the offence charged without any qualification. The Judge should see whether or not the man understood what the charge was in order to ascertain what he meant by his plea of guilty.² Thus, where the accused instead of pleading guilty in the words of the section makes a rambling statement more or less admitting guilt, it would be much safer if the Judge records a plea of not guilty and proceeds to try the case in the ordinary way.³ A plea of guilty can only be made in response to a charge made by the Court, an informal admission as to the guilt does not amount to a formal plea of guilty and such an admission has not the same binding effect as a plea of guilty.^{3a} The plea of guilty must distinctly admit each and every fact necessary to constitute the offence. Thus, where the accused merely admits that he beat his wife and that she died but does not admit that he had any intention of causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, it is not a sufficient plea of guilty to the charge of murder.⁴ Similarly, where an accused, while admitting that he killed the deceased, states that he was not in his right mind at the time,⁵ or that he did it under grave and sudden provocation,⁶ or that he was put to instant fear of death by the co-accused,⁷ or that he did it while under epileptic fits,⁸ or in a struggle arising from the fact of the deceased having first attacked him,⁹ he cannot be said to have pleaded guilty to the charge of murder. Likewise, where an accused, while admitting having presented a false petition, states that he did so under the influence of certain persons mentioned,¹⁰ or unthinkingly without the intention to injure,¹¹ he cannot be said to have pleaded guilty to the charge of intentionally giving a false complaint. Where the prisoner states that he is guilty but adds that he did not commit the offence with which he is charged, it does not amount to a plea of guilty.¹² A prisoner accused of dacoity admitted having accompanied the dacoits for a short distance but stated that he turned back immediately and had nothing to do with the dacoity, it was held that it did not amount to a plea of guilty to the charge of dacoity.¹³

Where a native Indian subject charged with the murder of another native Indian subject in a foreign territory admitted the causing of death but stated that he was not punishable for the act as the act was committed outside British India, it was held that the plea was really one of not guilty.¹⁴ After the accused has claimed to be tried, any confessional statement made by him at the end of the trial is not a plea of guilty on which the Judge can convict him without taking the verdict of the jury.¹⁵ The use of expressions like "Your honour will please pardon the fault; in future, no such thing will happen" is not itself an incriminating statement.¹⁶

A plea of guilty is not a confession such as is dealt with in the Evidence Act. The plea is a statement which if accepted by the Court, amounts to a waiver on the part of the accused, of trial, in which alone a confession might be utilised in evidence.¹⁷

See also Note 5 to S. 255.

8. Partial plea of guilty. — Where in a charge of intentionally giving false evidence in two alternate statements, the accused pleads guilty as to one, it does not by any means follow that a verdict of not guilty is to be recorded in the alternative matter of the charge. That ought to be tried in the ordinary way.¹ Where the prisoner pleads not guilty to the graver offence charged but guilty to the minor offence charged, the Court should proceed to try him for the graver offence. It is not competent to the Public Prosecutor to withdraw the charge after the accused had been arraigned and pleaded not guilty. The prisoner is entitled to a trial and a clear verdict of the jury.²

9. "Claims to be tried." — A plea of "not guilty" is not recognised by the Code. The accused can plead guilty under this section; he can claim to be tried or he can refuse to plead which amounts to the same thing as claiming to be tried. A plea of not guilty amounts to a claim to be tried.¹ Where an accused claims to be tried or makes a plea which amounts to such a plea, the Court should regularly try the accused and cannot convict him on a confession before the committing Magistrate.² In such cases there should be a formal trial by the jury or with the aid of assessors.³ If the accused, claiming to be tried, pleads that his act comes under any of the general exceptions in the Penal Code, he must plead them specifically. In the absence of such a plea, the absence of such circumstances will be presumed under S.105 of the Evidence Act.⁴ But this does not mean that the accused must lead the evidence. If it is apparent from the evidence on the record, whether produced by prosecution or by the defence, that the general exception would apply, then the presumption is removed and it is open to the Court to consider whether the evidence proves satisfactorily that the accused comes within the exception.⁵ Thus, where a right of private defence is not pleaded, the Court on finding on the evidence before it that the accused acted in his right of private defence, is bound to take

The language in which the statement is conveyed to the Court by the interpreter is the language in which it should be recorded.³ The plea of guilty should be taken down in the form of question and answer and in the exact words used by the accused.⁴

It is also desirable that shorthand notes of proceedings of Sessions Courts should be maintained so as to ensure a full and accurate record of what happens in Court.⁵

12. Plea of guilty — When may be accepted. — A plea of guilty may be accepted by the Court and the accused may be convicted thereon without the matter going before the assessors or the jury.¹ But the Court is not bound to accept a plea of guilty in all cases. On the other hand, the Court must carefully consider whether the accused has fully understood the nature of the charge to which he pleads guilty.^{1a} In cases where the natural sequence of accepting the plea of guilty would be a sentence of death, it is not in accordance with the usual practice to accept a plea of guilty.^{1b} Murder is a mixed question of law and fact and unless the Court is satisfied that the accused knew exactly what was implied by his plea of guilty, the plea should not be accepted but the case should be tried; specially where the accused is an ignorant person.² An accused person does not plead to a section of a criminal statute. He pleads guilty or not guilty to the facts alleged that disclose an offence under that section. Sometimes a "plea of guilty" is an admission only of the facts alleged and not the offence, as when such facts do not in law constitute the offence.³ So a plea of guilty cannot be accepted when the offence in question has not been committed in the eye of law.⁴ A plea of guilty cannot be accepted when it is clear that the offence was not correctly stated to him.⁵ Each case depends, however, upon its own circumstances which should be examined to see whether the plea of guilty is one which should be acted upon;⁶ where the prisoner has the services of a pleader and a plea of guilty is made advisedly, the Court can certainly convict him on his plea.^{6a} But where an accused, who is charged for an offence under S. 302, Penal Code (for which there is a clear prima facie evidence), pleads guilty to an offence under S. 304, Penal Code, the Court cannot accept the plea of guilty but should proceed to try him for the offence charged.⁷ There is no provision for an inquiry for the purpose of seeing if it is right and proper to convict the accused on his plea; if any such enquiry is necessary it should take the form of a trial and be conducted as such.⁸

Notes 12-18:

Though the section provides for a conviction being based on the accused's plea of guilty entered at the commencement of the proceedings, this does not mean that if at any later stage the accused pleads guilty the Court is not entitled to record the plea and convict the accused on such plea.⁹

13. "Thereon" in sub-section (2).—The word 'thereon' shows that the conviction is on the plea recorded before the Sessions Judge and has no reference to what has passed before the Magistrate in the preliminary enquiry. So, if the accused makes a plea which amounts to a claim to be tried before the Sessions Judge, he cannot be convicted on a confession made before the committing Magistrate.¹

Where an accused pleads guilty to the offence charged, he may either be convicted for the offence or, as has been seen in Note 12, the regular trial may be proceeded with. He must not be convicted of a different offence of which he did not plead guilty and for which he was not tried.² Thus, a person pleading guilty to a charge of murder cannot be convicted of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.³ Similarly, a person pleading guilty to a charge of culpable homicide not amounting to murder cannot be convicted of causing grievous hurt.⁴ In order that there may be a conviction on a plea of guilty, the plea must be in respect of the offence charged. Thus, where an accused was charged of murder but the Court finding that there was no evidence under that charge, convicted her of an offence under section 318 of the Penal Code considered to have been admitted by the accused, the conviction is illegal.⁵

The fact that the accused, tired of a lengthy trial or impressed by the weight of the evidence against him, or partly the one and partly the other, decides to cut short proceedings in the hope that a lenient sentence would be passed on him, is not in itself a ground for departing from the ordinary tariff of punishment for the offence.⁶

14. Procedure where plea of guilty is not accepted. —

Section 272 provides that where an accused person refuses to or does not plead or claims to be tried, the Court shall proceed to try the case. There is no specific provision enabling the Court to try the case where the accused pleads guilty and the Court does not accept the same, though sub-s.(2) of this section provides that he may be convicted on such plea. In England where the Court does not think it expedient to act upon the accused's plea of guilty, the usual procedure is to advise him to withdraw his plea of guilty and to plead not guilty.¹ In this country, the general trend of opinion is that the accused may be treated in such cases as if he had pleaded not guilty, and that the trial may be proceeded with in the ordinary way.² The High Court of Calcutta has, however, in the undermentioned case,³ held that the discretion denoted by the word "may" is either to convict the accused, or in a suitable case, to leave the matter there and discharge him, but does not include the power to proceed with the trial against him. In this view it has further held therein that where a person has pleaded guilty, he ceases ipso facto to be an accused person. According to the Chief Court of Oudh, the only course open to the Court where a plea of guilty is not accepted by it is to proceed to trial.⁴

15. Plea of guilty by a co-accused. — Under S. 30 of the Evidence Act, when more persons than one are being tried jointly for the same offence, and a confession made by one of such persons affecting himself and some other of such persons is proved, the Court may take into consideration such confession as against such other person as well as against the person who makes such confession. So the question arises whether in cases where one of several accused jointly tried pleads guilty to the charge, he can be said to be jointly tried within the meaning of S. 30 of the Evidence Act, so as to render his admissions receivable in evidence against the other accused. In the undermentioned case,¹ the High Court of Calcutta has held that where a person pleads guilty, the only course open to the Court (whether it accepts such plea or not) is either to convict him or discharge him and that he can no longer be said to be an accused person jointly tried with others. This view, as has been seen in Note 14, in so far as it relates to cases where the plea is not accepted by the Court, is against the general trend of opinion. In cases where the plea of guilty is accepted by the Court, a conviction should follow and the accused will, of course, cease to be an accused person from that moment. Section 30 of the Evidence Act, will not therefore apply.² In cases where the plea of guilty is not accepted by the Court and the Court proceeds to trial against him, the accused does not cease to be so until the end of the trial and S. 30 will apply.³

Where one of the accused pleads guilty and the Court accepts it, it should not defer his conviction in order that his confession may be considered against his co-accused. Such a procedure is clearly against the spirit of the law.⁴ The accused should be convicted at once⁵ and should be removed from the dock in which case he can give evidence against his co-accused.⁶ It is always desirable to pass a sentence completely before calling one accused who pleads guilty in a joint trial to give evidence against a co-accused,⁷ so that the witness may give his evidence free of all corrupt influence which the fear of impending punishment and the desire to obtain immunity to himself at the expense of other prisoner might otherwise produce.⁸ But the admissibility of the evidence of such accused pleading guilty ought not to be decided on the narrow technical ground that he had not been convicted but on the broad ground that when he gave his evidence he was not in charge of jury and no issue remained to be tried between him and the Crown.⁹

Where, in a joint trial, A is charged with murder and B with being an accessory after the fact, the question whether the deceased, was murdered by A is an issue between B and the Crown, and hence, the counsel for B is entitled to insist on the proof of the murder and challenge the evidence of it even if A has pleaded guilty.¹⁰

See also Note 8 to section 255.

16. Appeal.—Where an accused pleads guilty and he is convicted thereon, he has no right of appeal except as to the extent or legality of the sentence. See section 412.

Where the Court has recorded that the accused pleaded guilty, the High Court cannot in a case in which the accused appeared by a pleader admit the affidavit of the accused for the purpose of showing that he did not plead guilty. If there has been any mistake in the matter it is the vakil and not the client, who ought to make an affidavit.¹

Where an accused person has been convicted on his own plea of guilty, he is not entitled on notice being issued to him under S. 439 sub-s.(2) of the Code for showing cause against enhancement of sentence to go behind the plea of guilty as a confession of the facts

1. Legislative changes. — The first paragraph of this section corresponds to S. 363 of the Code of 1861 and S. 238 of the Code of 1872. The proviso corresponds to S. 347 of the Code of 1861 and S. 265 of the Code of 1872.

2. "Refuses to, or does not, plead, or if he claims to be tried." — An accused person charged with an offence can either plead "guilty" or may "claim to be tried." A plea of "not guilty" is not recognised by the Code,¹ though such a plea, if made, will be considered as amounting to a "claim to be tried." As a matter of practice, however, the expression "not guilty" is generally used and is taken as amounting to a "claim to be tried."

Where an accused makes no answer to the question whether he is guilty, an enquiry should be made whether he is obstinately mute or is dumb ex visitatione dei. In either case a plea of claiming to be tried should be recorded and the trial proceeded with.² Where, in answer to a charge of murder, the accused stated : "I did not mean to kill him ; why should I kill my brother ? Nor did I strike him so much that he should die," it was held that the statement amounted to a plea of "not guilty."³ See also the undermentioned case.^{3a}

Where an accused is put upon his trial and has pleaded "not guilty" to the charge or has claimed to be tried, he is entitled to have the trial proceeded with⁴ as a protection against a future proceeding against him in respect of the same charge.⁵ He cannot be released without trial on the ground that there is no case against him.⁶ Nor can he be convicted without trial solely upon a confession before the committing Magistrate.⁷

3. Trial by same jury or assessors of several offenders —

Proviso. — It has been seen in S. 233 that where several charges are made against an accused person, the general rule is that each charge should be tried separately. The same principle will also apply where several persons are accused of offences in a case. The general rule is that they should be tried separately except in cases falling within S. 239.¹ This proviso enacts that in those cases in which several accused persons in a Sessions case are to be tried separately, it is not necessary to choose a fresh jury or a fresh set of assessors for each such separate trial, and that the same jury or assessors may act in all the trials, subject, of course, to the right of the accused provided in the Code to object to the jury or any one or more members of the jury.²

But the same jury may try or the same assessors may aid in the trial of any number of accused persons in a case only one after the other and not simultaneously.³ A simultaneous trial in such cases is an illegality which is not curable by S. 537 of the Code.⁴

In the undermentioned case⁵ certain members of two opposing parties in a riot were sent up for trial under two distinct committals. After the close of the case for the prosecution in one of the cases, the Sessions Judge postponed the taking of the evidence for the defence and proceeded to examine the witnesses for the prosecution in the other case before the same jury. He then took the evidence of the witnesses for the defence in the first case and in the counter-case in the order named and then summed up the facts in both the cases to the jury who returned a verdict in respect of all the accused. Princep, J., observed as follows :

"The law declares that the 'same jury may try as many accused persons successively as to the Court seems fit.' By this we understand that one trial is to follow the other, that is, that, on the conclusion of one trial, the same jury may proceed to try the accused in the next case. The law does not contemplate that two trials shall be conducted piecemeal in such a manner that at their conclusion the jury shall be called upon to decide at one and the same time upon two distinct classes of evidence which, though they have points in common, require careful discrimination as bearing upon the guilt or innocence of two sets of accused. Independently of the irregularity of the proceeding, no jury ought, we think, to be placed in such an embarrassing position."

(2) Such entry shall have the effect of staying proceedings upon the charge or portion of the charge, as the case may be.

1. Object and applicability of the section. — The section is intended to provide a short and effective way by which charges which have no merits may be disposed of.¹ This special power is, however, only conferred on the High Courts² and cannot be exercised by Sessions Judges.³

Applications under this section should be disposed of by the High Court in the exercise of its ordinary original criminal jurisdiction.⁴

2. "The Judge may make on the charge an entry to that effect" — Sub-section (1). — Where the Court is of opinion that no offence is made out, it is its duty to make an order under this section.

3. Effect of the entry — Sub-section (2). — An entry made under this section has not the effect of an acquittal. The accused may again be tried for the same offence.¹ Section 439 has no application to an entry made under this section. See sub-s.(4) of that section. Difference between the Code of 1861 and the Code of 1872 —

The number of which a jury was to consist, under the Code of 1861, was five or an uneven number not less than five and not more than nine. This number was reduced to three in the Code of 1872. Both S. 327 of the Code of 1861 and S. 236 of the Code of 1872, however, dealt with the number of jury in Sessions Courts only.

Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882 —

The provision as to the number of jury in the High Courts was newly added to the section in 1882.

Difference between the Codes of 1882 and 1898 —

There was no change effected in the Code of 1898, but by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923, the word "five" in sub-s.(2) of the section was substituted for the word "three" which occurred in the second paragraph of the old section. The proviso to the section was also newly added by the said Act of 1923.

2. Non-compliance with the section — Effect of. — A trial by a jury consisting of a larger number of men than is authorized by the section is a nullity.¹

3. "Jury," meaning of. — See S. 267 Note I.

4. Jury in cases of offences punishable with death — Proviso. — As has been seen in S. 269, the Provincial Government may direct that the trial of certain offences shall be by jury in any district. Where an offence punishable with death is so declared to be triable by jury, this proviso will apply, and the jury should consist of nine persons unless it is impracticable to get that number, in which case the number should be at least seven. Under S. 326, the number of jurors to be summoned is to be double the number required for the trial. Where a lesser number of persons is summoned, and some of them do not attend, with the result that seven persons are empanelled, it cannot be said that it is impracticable to get a jury of nine, and consequently the tribunal is not one legally constituted.¹ Where only fourteen persons were summoned but eleven of them were present out of whom, however, only seven were empanelled and it was not shown that it was not practicable to get nine persons, it was held that the jury was illegally constituted and the trial bad.²

But where eighteen persons were summoned out of whom only eight attended and consequently only a jury of seven was empanelled, it was held that the proceedings were not vitiated.³

Where there is nothing on the record to show whether the trial Court considered the practicability of having nine jurors, the High Court on appeal ought to proceed on the assumption that the trial in

1. Scope of the section.—Section 275, as it stood before 1923, provided that, in a trial by jury of a person not an European or American, a majority of the jury should consist of persons who were neither Europeans nor Americans. Section 450, now repealed, provided that in all trials of European British subjects before the High Court or the Court of Session the accused may claim to be tried by jury, half the number of which should be Europeans or Americans, provided, in cases triable with the aid of assessors, he may, instead of claiming to be tried by jury, claim that half the number of assessors should be Europeans or Americans. Section 460, also now repealed, provided that in the case of an European not being a British subject, or an American, half the number of the jury or assessors, as the case may be, should, if practicable, consist of Europeans or Americans.¹ This section and S.284A, together deal with the matter dealt with by the said Ss. 275, 450 and 460, but with the following important changes:

In trials by jury —

If the accused is an European British subject, he may claim that the majority of the jury shall be Europeans or Americans. If the accused is an Indian British subject, he may claim that the majority of the jury shall consist of Indians. If he is an European not being a British subject, or an American, he may claim that a majority of the jury shall consist of Europeans or Americans and this will be allowed only where it is practicable.

In trials with the aid of assessors —

If the accused is an European British subject, he may claim that all the assessors should be Europeans or Americans. If he is an Indian British subject, he may claim that all the assessors should be Indians. If he is an European not being a British subject or an American, he may claim that all the assessors shall be Europeans or Americans and this will be allowed where it is practicable to do so.

The claim to be tried as an European or Indian British subject mentioned in Ss. 528A and 528B is a different and distinct one from the claim to be tried by a majority of European or Indian jury as mentioned in this section, though it can only be put forward by a person who has, in the language of the section, been found under the provisions of the Code to be an European or an Indian British subject.²

A claim to be tried under this section can validly be made whether the complainant and the accused are both European or Indian British subjects, or one is an European and the other an Indian British subject.³

2. Right to be tried by majority of jurors of the nationality of the accused. — Under the High Court Criminal Procedure Act, 1875, a person who was not an European British subject was not entitled to be tried by a jury consisting of a majority of persons who were neither Europeans nor Americans.¹ Such a right was first recognised by the Code of 1882. There is, however, no provision that the jurors should be co-religionists with the accused.²

3. Privileges of Europeans other than British subjects. — Europeans other than European British subjects or Americans have, under sub-s.(2) of this section, a right that a majority of the jury shall, if practicable, consist of persons who are Europeans or Americans; and, under S.285A, in the case of trials with the aid of assessors, all the assessors shall, if practicable, be persons who are Europeans or Americans. They have no other special privileges.¹

4. "Who has been found Indian British subject." — It is not sufficient for the accused to merely assert that he is an European or Indian British subject. He should have been found under the provisions of this Code to belong to the particular nationality.¹ As to such provisions, see Ss. 443, 528A and 529B.

1. Legislative changes. — There was no material difference between S. 342 of the Code of 1861 and S. 240 of the Code of 1872 corresponding to this section.

Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882 —

A proviso corresponding to the proviso first, second and third of this section was added in S. 276 of the Code of 1882.

The words "in such manner as the High Court may from time to time by rule direct" were newly added.

Difference between the Codes of 1882 and 1898 —

The last paragraph of the proviso was newly added in 1898.

Amendment in 1923 —

The words "in the Presidency Towns" were substituted by the words "in a trial before any High Court in the town which is the usual place of sitting of such High Court," by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, XVIII of 1923.

2. Scope of the section. — Section 326 provides that the names of those who are to be summoned to act as jurors should be drawn by lot from among the whole body of persons who are in the list of jurors. This section provides that those again who are to try a particular case are to be similarly chosen by lot from among the persons so summoned, or, where there is a deficiency, from amongst such other persons as might be present in Court. Where a Judge fails to obtain a panel in this manner, it is his duty to postpone the trial until the requisite number of jurors has been obtained in the manner provided by law.¹

The object of these provisions is to secure an impartial trial by rendering impossible any intentional selection of jurors to try a particular case and an accused person has a right to claim to be tried by a jury chosen with strict regard to all the safeguards provided therein to secure perfect impartiality.^{1a}

This section and the following Ss. 277, 278 and 279 must be read together as prescribing the procedure for empanelling jurors,² the former, with all its provisos, being a general section dealing with the general nature of the procedure, the details of that procedure being given in the latter.³ The procedure to be adopted is as follows : In the first instance a ballot should be taken from among the persons summoned under S. 326,⁴ without any preliminary enquiry as to how many of them are present i. e., the names of the persons summoned should be drawn from the box, one by one, each after another, and called aloud as each is drawn and the accused asked whether he has any objection to such juror. If he objects, the objection should be decided and the juror either retained or rejected as the case may be. When all the names have been so drawn and a number of persons have answered to their names and accepted without objection, a deficiency in the number of persons required, if any, will become manifest. The deficiency will be the number by which the number of persons answering their names and empanelled falls short of the number of persons of which the jury should consist. At this stage, the second proviso to the section begins to operate and the Court has to exercise a discretion whether to allow persons to be chosen from among those present in Court in sufficient number to supply the deficiency, or whether to adjourn the case for a fresh jury to be summoned. If the Court decides to choose from among the persons present, the accused should be asked, as each such person is chosen, whether he objects to him and after deciding the objection should proceed to choose other persons present in the same manner until the deficiency is made up.⁵

A jury not empanelled in accordance with these principles is not one constituted in accordance with the law.⁶

3. "Shall be chosen by lot from the persons summoned to act."—Sub-s.(2) of S. 279 indicates that the manner of choosing by lot provided by this section applies only to jurors attending in obedience to summons and not to persons selected from those present in Court.¹

It is desirable, if not necessary, that the Judge should, where all the jurors have been chosen by lot, specifically state that they have been so chosen by lot.² Where one of the jurors was a person who was not entitled to sit on the jury, having not been summoned, it was held that the Court was not properly constituted.³

Where, out of the persons summoned the Court asked those who knew English to sit apart and from out of such persons chose the number required by lot, and this procedure was consented to by the Public Prosecutor and by the counsel for the accused in view of the fact that there were in the case certain documents in English and identity of hand-writing was a fact in issue, it was held that the choosing having been done by lot the action of the Court in making the choice from amongst those who knew English was well within its inherent powers of ensuring a fair trial.⁴

4. Deficiency of persons—Second proviso.—The word "juror" in the second proviso to the section is a general term meaning both special and common jurors and, therefore, the procedure provided therein for making up any deficiency in the number of persons summoned applies both to common as well as to special jurors called under the third and fourth provisos to the section.¹ Thus, where eighteen special jurors were summoned but only five were present, it was held that it was open to the Judge to supplement the five special jurors with persons who happened to be present though they were not in the special jury list.²

Where the jury, at the end of the ballot, were found to be four short and four gentlemen fit to be jurors were chosen from among the by-standers, it was held that the procedure adopted was correct.³

As has been seen in Note 2 above, the Court has a discretion in case of a deficiency in the number of persons summoned, either to choose the number of jurors required from among those present and proceed with the trial, or to adjourn the trial.⁴ But the persons from amongst whom the deficiency is made up must be present in Court. Persons who are not present in Court cannot be sent for, for the purpose of being called as jurors and then chosen. A trial with a jury consisting of persons so chosen is not a trial by a jury empanelled according to law.⁵

A person is present within the meaning of the section if he is in the precincts of the Court building either because he has been summoned for other cases or by mere chance. It is not necessary that he should be present within the four walls of the actual court-room in which the proceedings are being conducted. The intention of the Legislature is only to prevent the summoning of the individuals from the locality where a deficiency occurs in the number of persons summoned.⁶

There is no provision in the Code by which the Court is to ascertain beforehand how many of the persons summoned to serve as jurors have attended and thus to determine the deficiency which has to be supplied. The stage at which it should be ascertained whether the persons summoned have attended or not is not reached until their names are called out for the purpose of empanelling a jury.⁷

The deficiency mentioned in the proviso refers to the deficiency in the number required to make up the quorum under S. 274 and not to the deficiency in the minimum number required for drawing lots.⁸

The word "chosen" in the proviso simply means "selected" and not "chosen by lot."⁹

5. Special jury. — Provisos 3 and 4 deal with cases in which a special jury may be summoned.¹ A special juror is a person whose name has been entered in a special list of persons prepared under Ss. 313 and 325, such persons having been selected by reason of their possessing superior qualifications in respect of property, character or education which make them fit to serve as special jurors. Where the accused is charged with an offence punishable with death, a trial before the High Court should invariably be by a special jury. In other trials before the High Court if the Judge so directs the jurors may be chosen from the special jury list. In the undermentioned case² in which the accused was charged with an offence under S. 124A of the Penal Code, the High Court allowed a special jury.

The Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court (now the Chief Court of Sind) is a High Court within the meaning of proviso 3 to this section, and a Judge of that Court, exercising jurisdiction as a Sessions Court, has power to direct a special jury to be empanelled under clause (b) of the proviso.³

The word 'chosen' in provisos 3 and 4 means "chosen by lot" as in the substantive part of the section.⁴

6. Defect in selecting jurors by lot. — There is a conflict of opinion on the question whether a defect or irregularity in the constitution of the jury, as for example, in not selecting jurymen by lot, is one curable by the application of S. 537. On the one hand, it has been held by the High Courts of Madras,¹ Nagpur² and Patna³ and the Chief Court of Oudh⁴ that it is curable under S. 537. On the other hand, the High Courts of Allahabad⁵ and Calcutta⁶ and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind⁷ have taken a contrary view on the ground that an irregularity in the constitution of the jury affects the constitution of the Court and its competence. It is submitted that the latter view is preferable.

It has been held that an objection as to the constitution of the jury under S. 274⁸ or as to any defect or irregularity in the constitution

2. Objection as to partiality — Clause (a).

2. Objection as to partiality — Clause (a). — Where a juror who was the head-master of a school of one X, was alleged to be an acquaintance of the Public Prosecutor who was alleged to be the retained pleader of the estate of the said X, the accused himself having nothing to do with X, it was held that, that fact was not a valid ground of objection within the meaning of this section.¹ But where it appeared that there was litigation pending between the accused's master and another person whose agent the juror was, it was held that the facts gave a ground for presumed partiality in the juror.²

3. Inability to understand language—Clause (g). — Inability to understand the language in which the evidence is given or when such evidence is interpreted, the language in which it is interpreted, is a valid ground of objection. The effect of the incompetence of the juror on this ground is to deny to the accused an essential part of the protection accorded to him by law.¹ See also S. 297 Note 16.

4. Failure to object — Effect of. — The objection to each juror must be raised upon his appearance in obedience to the call made under S. 277. A failure to object to a juror at that time would amount to a waiver¹ and if the trial proceeds the constitution of the jury cannot be assailed later on.²

In Ras Behari Lal v. Emperor,³ a juror had been empanelled and joined in a verdict of guilty who could not understand the language in which the evidence was given. Such inability was unknown to the accused until after the event. In these circumstances, their Lordships of the Privy Council held that there was a grave injustice or a "scandal and perversion of justice." Accordingly, the conviction was set aside and the Crown was left to take such course as to a new trial as the law would allow. In Alexander Kennedy v. The King,⁴ an objection was raised to certain members of the jury on the ground of actual or presumed partiality; but the objection was not raised at the time when the jury was empanelled because the accused was not aware of the facts at that time. It was contended on the authority of Ras Behari Lal's case that in such cases, the objection should be given effect to and that the conviction should be quashed. This contention was rejected by the Privy Council which observed as follows:

"Their Lordships see nothing in that decision (Ras Behari Lal's case) to warrant the wide proposition contended for that in every case in which there was material for a successful challenge and it was not made for excusable reasons an adverse verdict should be set aside."

Provided that no objection to such juror or other person is taken under section 278 and allowed.

Synopsis

1. Legislative changes.
2. Scope and object of the section.
3. Objection to a juror — Decision on.
4. Procedure on allowing objection to juror — Sub-section (2).

1. Legislative changes. — The word “recorded” in sub-s. (1) of the section was not present in the Code of 1861 or of 1872. It was introduced in section 279 of the Code of 1892.

2. Scope and object of the section. — As has been seen in the Notes to S. 276, the object of Ss. 276 to 279 is to secure an impartial trial by rendering impossible any intentional selection of jurors to try a particular case.¹

Section 276 is a general section dealing with the general nature of the procedure. The details of that procedure are given in Ss. 277 to 279.² Sub-section (2) of this section deals with a case where there is no effective lot owing to absence or objection or both and it provides how the number is to be completed.³ It contemplates the possibility of a person not in the jury list being chosen to serve on the jury in case of emergency.⁴

3. Objection to a juror — Decision on. — Every objection taken to a juror must be decided by the Court and it should make a record of such decision.¹ Where an objection, on any of the grounds (a) to (g) of section 278 is made out to the satisfaction of the Court, it “shall” be allowed. An objection on the ground of any other circumstance will be allowed only when, in the opinion of the Court, such circumstance renders the juror improper to act as such.² The Court has a wide discretion in the matter of accepting or overruling objections and, in this respect, its decision is final.³ Thus, where on objection being taken as to the presumed or actual partiality in a juror, the Court decides that no such partiality has been made out, that decision is absolutely final and cannot be challenged in appeal.⁴ If, however, the Court finds that such partiality has been made out, but in spite of that finding the Court overrules the objection, the decision may, according to the undermentioned case,⁵ perhaps be challenged in appeal.

4. Procedure on allowing objection to juror — Sub-section (2). — Where an objection to a juror is allowed, his place should be supplied by any other juror attending in obedience to a summons and chosen in the manner provided by S. 276, i. e., by lot. If no such juror is present, his place should be supplied by any other person present in Court whose name is on the jury list, or whom the Court considers a proper person to serve on the jury subject to a successful objection as stated in the proviso.¹ This latter selection need not, as has been seen in the Notes to S. 276, be by lot,² though it must only be from among the persons present.^{2a} A requisition of persons from outside for the purpose of choosing jurors is not legal.³ See also Notes to section 276.

1. Legislative changes. — The provision as to the adding of a new juror when "any juror is unable to understand the language in which the evidence is given or, when such evidence is interpreted, the language in which it is interpreted" did not exist in the corresponding sections of the Codes of 1861 and 1872 but was newly added in the Code of 1882.

1a. Scope of the section. — This section is limited to cases where a jury has been properly empanelled at the outset and one or more of the casualties which are bound to occur sometimes in human lives has in fact occurred. Sub-s.(2) of this section also contemplates the addition of a juror after the trial of the case has begun and not before.¹

2. Inherent power of Court to discharge jury. — The Code provides for the discharge of the jury only in the following cases :

1. Under this section when in the course of the trial a juror is absent, or is unable to attend, or does not understand the language of the proceedings.
2. Under S. 283 when the prisoner becomes incapable of remaining at the bar.
3. Under S. 305 where, in trials before the High Court the Judge disagrees with the opinion of the majority of the jury.

But the said sections are not exhaustive of all the circumstances under which a jury may be discharged. In a case which obviously demands interference but which is not within those for which the Code specifically provides, the Court has an inherent power to make such order as the ends of justice require.¹ Thus, a Judge may discharge a jury on the ground that a juror has misconducted himself during the trial,² or on the ground that the judge finds reason for doubting the impartiality of the jury.^{2a} The power should not however be exercised lightly nor until the Judge has satisfied himself by judicial inquiry that reasonable grounds exist for exercising such a right.³ But the Judge is not bound to hold an inquiry whenever a juror is alleged to have misconducted himself. The question whether the Judge should or should not hold an inquiry is a matter within his discretion.^{3a} The Judge has undoubted jurisdiction for the purposes of such inquiry to call upon persons to appear before him, to administer oath to them and to require them to give evidence.⁴ A juror may be guilty of misconduct where he is found talking to the Court Inspector when the case is called on for hearing,⁵ or where during the progress of the trial he talks to persons connected with the accused or discusses the case which is being tried before him.⁶ A mere expression of opinion to a friend in a private conversation will not, however, be a ground for discharging the jury.⁷ Nor can the jury be discharged merely because a witness for the defence does not attend and a postponement of the case is asked for.⁸

Where the foreman of the jury gave out the verdict in Court after the prosecution evidence was over and before the defence evidence was let in, it was held in the undermentioned case⁹ that the Judge had no power to discharge the jury and that he should have proceeded with the trial after explaining to the jury their error in not waiting until all the evidence was over. In a somewhat similar case in the Calcutta High Court, the Advocate-General was allowed to enter a nolle prosequi under s. 333 and the difficulty was thus got over.¹⁰

Where a juror is found guilty of misconduct during trial, the Judge is, however, not bound to discharge the whole jury. He may deal with the matter on the analogy of this section and add a new juror in place of the juror removed by choosing him from among the persons present in Court.¹¹

A jury can be discharged by the Judge in the exercise of his inherent power even after the verdict has been recorded.¹²

Where an order discharging a jury in the exercise of the inherent power of a Sessions Judge is found to be unjustified, the only relief that the High Court can give is to order a fresh trial before another jury.¹³

See also sections 296 and 300 and Notes thereon.

3. "Is prevented from attending throughout the trial." — Whether a juror is prevented from attending throughout the trial depends, among other things, on the days during which the trial is going to take place, and whether an adjournment should be given for any length of time. There is a discretion in the judge whether to postpone the trial to a date on which the juror should be able to attend or to discharge the jury. If the juror is able to attend in a very short time it is a wrong exercise of discretion to discharge the jury.¹

4. "The trial shall commence anew." — Where a new juror is added or the jury is discharged under this section, the trial must commence anew and cannot be continued from the stage at which the juror or the jury was discharged. Thus, where, after the examination of some witnesses in the case a juror was found to be deaf and was consequently discharged, and a new juror added, it was held that the

2. "Not less than three." — Under the present section as amended in 1923, there should at least be three assessors. Prior to this amendment, the minimum number required was two. The section is imperative, and where at least the minimum number of assessors do not attend, the Court is not properly constituted and has no jurisdiction to try the case.¹

3. "And if practicable, four." — Where a lesser number of assessors than four is chosen the Court should give reasons to explain the impracticability of having four. But a trial with three assessors without a record of these reasons is not irregular and does not offend against the provisions of this section.¹

4. "Shall be chosen," meaning of. — This section, unlike S. 276, does not prescribe that the assessors are to be chosen by lot. In fact it does not say that they ought to be chosen in any particular manner. It is not the law that the assessors must be chosen by lot. The word 'chosen' does not necessarily imply that there ought to be a selection from a larger number than required for the trial.¹

A mere choosing of assessors is not enough. They must function as assessors at the trial. It is only when proceedings are commenced at which assessors can give their aid, that the trial with their aid as contemplated under S. 268 and this section can be said to have commenced. So where, though the required number of assessors is chosen as required by this section, some of them are discharged on some ground or other before the trial actually starts, and the same goes on with less than the required number of assessors, the requirements of this section are not satisfied.^{1a}

The selection of the assessors is entirely with the Judge. In selecting them regard must be had to the nature of the case, to the person who is tried, to the nature of the evidence that is brought against him, and to the public feeling. The assessors ought not to be pleaders, nor young men fresh from college, devoid of experience. They must be persons of independent condition in life, men of judgment and experience.²

5. "From the persons summoned to act as such." — As to the summoning of assessors, see Ss. 326 and 327.

Section 279 empowers the Judge, under special circumstances, to choose a person present in Court to act as a juror though he had not been summoned as required by S. 276. There is no provision corresponding to that with regard to the selection of assessors. So, no person can be asked to act as an assessor unless he had been summoned under ss. 326 and 327 to act as such¹ and such summons can be issued only to persons whose names have been included in the list prepared under S. 321.² But where on the date of the trial only three of the assessors summoned under S. 326 remain present and a person present in Court whose name is on the list of persons qualified to serve as assessors is served with a summons to appear and act as such and the Judge chooses him as an assessor on the date of the trial, it cannot be said that he was not chosen in accordance with law and the trial is not contrary to law.^{2a} Where an assessor summoned to appear on a particular day failed to appear on that day but appeared on a subsequent date during the same session when another trial had to commence, it was held that he could be selected to act as assessor in that trial.³

Where the assessors with whose aid the case was tried were chosen from the persons summoned to act as jurors, it was held that the trial was illegal.⁴

6. Objections as to assessors.— There is no section, corresponding to S. 278, providing for objections to the selection of any particular person as an assessor. It is, however, an elementary principle that assessors selected should be above suspicion inasmuch as their opinion is of great value both to the Judge who tries the case, and to the superior Court. There is no reason therefore why an objection of presumed or actual partiality, when it is urged at the time of the selection of assessors, should not be allowed.¹

There is no provision in the case of assessors corresponding to S. 282 as in the case of jurors. Even if the principle of that section applies, the fact that an assessor (who understands the language of the Court) does not understand English will not invalidate a trial unless there has been a failure to interpret in the court language evidence which had been given in English. Similarly, the fact that some documents are in English which the assessor is unable to understand will

But where an assessor summoned to appear on a particular date for the purpose of any particular case, appears only on a different date, and a different case is started with him as one of the assessors,³ or where only three assessors are chosen without giving reasons for not choosing four (after the amendment in 1923),⁴ the trial is not illegal.

1. Legislative changes.

- (1) There is no material difference between the corresponding sections of the Codes of 1861 and 1872.
- (2) The words "prevented from attending throughout the trial" which occurred in S. 259 of the Code of 1872 have been substituted by the words "prevented from attendance" in the Codes of 1882 and 1898.

2. Scope and applicability of the section. — This section applies only where, in the course of a trial, an assessor is unable to attend. It contemplates the case of a trial which has commenced with the requisite number of assessors who, at the commencement of the trial, were capable of acting as competent assessors. It has no application to trials conducted from the start with less than the requisite number of competent assessors.¹

There must be at least one assessor attending throughout the proceedings² and this requirement is a condition precedent to the exercise of jurisdiction by the Court.³

3. "Prevented from attending, or absent themselves" — Sub-section (2). — The words "prevented from attending, or absent themselves" in sub-s. (2) of this section should be read with sub-s. (1) and should be understood to mean "prevented from attending throughout the trial, or absent themselves."¹

4. "Shall proceed with the aid of the other assessor or assessors." — This procedure has to be adopted only when it is not practicable to enforce the attendance of the absentee assessor. Where the Judge allowed one of two assessors to absent himself for one of the days of the trial and proceeded to try the case with the other assessor, it was held that the Judge ought not to have proceeded with the trial, but should have adjourned the trial till a day when both assessors could attend.¹ Where an assessor absents himself, he should not be allowed to return and take part in the proceedings at a later stage.² The reason is that when once the trial is resumed by the Judge in the absence of an assessor, such assessor ceases to occupy the position of an assessor aiding at the trial.³ If, consequently, he is allowed to return and take part in the proceedings and give his opinion, the procedure is not in accordance with law,⁴ and is contrary to the intentions of this section and S. 295.⁵ The procedure is, however, only an irregularity which is cured by S. 537 unless it has occasioned a failure of justice.⁶

5. All assessors absent — Sub-section (2). — It has been seen already in Note 2 that for a valid trial at least one assessor must attend throughout the trial. If all the assessors are prevented from attending or no one assessor is able to attend throughout the trial, the proceedings should be stayed and a new trial held with the aid of fresh assessors.¹ But a Sessions Judge is only authorised to record evidence in the absence of the jury or the assessors when additional evidence is called for by the appellate Court, under S. 429, sub-s.(3)² or by the High Court under section 375, sub-s.(2). Where material evidence was recorded after all the assessors were discharged, it was held that such evidence was recorded coram non judice, — that is, before a tribunal which had no authority to record it.³ The same principle will apply where there was no assessor present during the address on behalf of the accused.⁴ The non-compliance with this sub-section affects the jurisdiction of the Court and the irregularity is, therefore, not one curable under section 537.⁵

6. If assessor is an interested person — Procedure. — Where it is discovered after the trial has begun, in a case tried with the aid of assessors, that one of them is interested or otherwise unfit to sit as an assessor, this section does not apply as the said assessor is neither prevented from attending nor absents himself. In such a case, the

Sessions Judge should ask the High Court under S. 483 to set aside the order by which the incompetent assessor was appointed as well as all the subsequent proceedings and then choose another assessor and proceed with the trial de novo.¹ Where, however, at the end of the trial one of the assessors expresses the opinion that the accused is guilty adding that he has personal knowledge of the matter, there is no necessity of a de novo trial as the assessor cannot be said to be an interested person. The proper course for the Judge is simply to ignore the opinion of the assessor if he comes to the conclusion that it is improperly expressed or that he has been influenced by extra-judicial considerations.²

Section 285A

285A. In any case in which an European or American is accused jointly with a person not being an European or American, or an Indian British subject is accused jointly with a person not being an Indian; and such European, Indian British subject or American is committed for trial before a Court of Session, he and such other person may be tried together, but if he requires to be tried in accordance with the provisions of section 275 or section 284A and is so tried, and the other person accused requires to be tried separately, such other person shall be tried separately in accordance with the provisions of this Chapter.

2. "And is so tried." — The words "and is so tried" in this section mean "if he is in fact so tried" or "if he is eventually so tried." Thus, a European was accused jointly with an Indian and when they appeared for the first time before the Sessions Judge, the European wanted to be tried as a European British subject and the other accused wanted to be tried jointly with him. The Sessions Judge instead of starting the proceeding under S. 271 referred the matter for the orders of the High Court as it was not possible to get sufficient European jurors in the place. The High Court directed the case to be tried by another Sessions Court. The Indian accused when he appeared before the latter Court claimed to be tried separately and contended that as no trial was in progress when he had previously stated that he did not want to be tried separately, he was not bound by his previous choice. The contention was held to be untenable.¹

1. Legislative changes. — This section was first introduced in its present form by the Act of 1882 and remains unaltered in the present Code.

2. "When the jurors or assessors have been chosen." — After the jurors are sworn, the trial should proceed and cannot be postponed to enable the prosecution to examine a witness on commission.¹ If, after the swearing in of the jury, the Judge is unable to attend, as where he falls ill suddenly, the trial can proceed further before a new Judge with the same jury provided no evidence has been taken and, if taken, the latter Judge does not act upon it.²

3. "The prosecutor shall open his case." — The opening of the prosecution must always be confined to matters which are necessary to enable the jury to follow the evidence. The prosecutor will have to state all that it is proposed to prove in the case, so that the jury may see if there is any discrepancy between the opening statement of the prosecutor and the evidence afterwards adduced in support thereof. It would be wholly improper for him to open any matter to the jury in respect whereof no evidence is intended to be read or can be adduced at the trial. Nor is it the stage where a doubtful question of admissibility should be raised or decided. Very great care must be taken by the prosecutor in the observations to be made to the jury and topics of prejudice connected with the character of the prisoner should be carefully excluded.¹

The prosecutor should state in his opening address who the witnesses are, whom he proposes to call and who have not already been examined. Though the mere fact that a witness has not been examined before the committing Magistrate is no ground for refusing to take the evidence of a relevant witness tendered for the prosecution, the examination of additional witnesses should not, as a general rule, be sprung as a surprise on the accused.² The Court should see that the prosecution puts forward a real case from the beginning and sticks to it up to the end.³

A Full Bench of the High Court of Lahore has expressed an opinion in the undermentioned case⁴ that, in accordance with the practice of the English Courts, a summary of the evidence proposed to be called should be given to the Sessions Court and the accused before the trial, if a witness has not been called in the committing Magistrate's Court.

4. "By reading." — The accused is entitled to know with certainty and accuracy the exact value of the charge brought against him, for, unless he has such knowledge, he may be seriously prejudiced in his defence.¹

5. Examination of accused before opening of case. — Section 342 of the Code empowering the Court to examine the accused at any stage, must be read subject to the provisions of this section. Therefore, a Court should not, before the prosecutor opens his case and examines his witnesses, under this section, examine the accused under section 342.¹

6. "Shall then examine his witnesses." — The prosecution witnesses should, as far as possible, be called to prove events in their chronological order.¹ It is entirely in the discretion of the Public Prosecutor to say what witnesses he will examine^{1a} and in what order. The Judge cannot dictate to the prosecution the order in which the witnesses are to be examined, though he may suggest that the proper method and order of calling the witnesses should be observed.²

also been summoned by the defence,⁶ or that a serious charge is made against the witness by the accused.⁷ At the same time, the prosecution should exercise a careful discrimination and avoid the piling up of evidence, the overburdening of the record and consequent waste of time.^{7a} There is no provision in the Code entitling the prisoner to have a witness for the prosecution who is not called, put into the witness box for cross-examination. The accused may apply to have such witness examined under S.291, if he so requires.⁸ Nevertheless the Public Prosecutor in fairness should explain to the Court his reason for not calling his witness and offer to put him in the box for cross-examination by the accused⁹ especially where the witness is a material one and whose evidence has been relied upon by the committing Magistrate.¹⁰ But where the Public Prosecutor is of opinion that a witness is a false one, he need not even tender him for cross-examination.¹¹ Where any witness known to the prosecution is able to swear to facts very material to the case, the practice of merely allowing him to be tendered for cross-examination is not proper but he must be examined in the ordinary way as to the facts known to him.¹² In undefended cases the Court should in the interests of justice test the statement of the witnesses for the prosecution by questions in the nature of cross-examination.¹³ It cannot, however,

Section 286.

On this question of the examination of witnesses by the prosecution, their Lordships of the Privy Council, in Stephen Seneviratne v. The King,^{15a} observed as follows:

"Their Lordships do not desire to lay down any rules to fetter discretion on a matter such as this which is so dependent on the particular circumstances of each case. Still less do they desire to discourage the utmost candour and fairness on the part of those conducting prosecutions; but at the same time they cannot, speaking generally, approve of an idea that a prosecution must call witnesses irrespective of considerations of number and of reliability, or that a prosecution ought to discharge the functions both of prosecution and defence. If it does so, confusion is very apt to result, and never is it more likely to result than if the prosecution calls witnesses and then proceeds almost automatically to discredit them by cross-examination. Witnesses essential to the unfolding of the narrative on which the prosecution is based, must, of course, be called by the prosecution, whether in the result the effect of their testimony is for or against the case for the prosecution."

Though there is nothing in the Code which says that the prosecutor at a sessions trial can examine only such witnesses as have been examined before a committing Magistrate,¹⁶ yet the prosecutor cannot, as of right, demand that any witness who was not examined by the committing Magistrate either under S. 208 or S. 219 should be called and examined, but the Court may call and examine such a witness if it considers it necessary in the interests of justice.¹⁷ But only the witnesses examined in the committing Magistrate's Court can be bound down to attend in the Sessions Court. If the witnesses are not so examined, the prosecution has to depend upon such witnesses, being willing to give evidence without being bound down to appear, or upon being able to persuade the Court under S.540 to summon such a witness.^{17a} The Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court has held that where a material witness has not been examined in the committing Magistrate's Court, his evidence cannot be relied on in the Sessions Court.^{17b} A Sessions Judge commits a material irregularity in procedure in refusing to take the evidence of the persons called as witnesses. Further, even if justified in so refusing, he should leave upon record clear and distinct reasons for adopting such a course.¹⁸ Where a case is tried by jury, the witnesses cannot be examined in the absence of the jury and their evidence, if taken, cannot be acted upon.¹⁹

When a material prosecution witness examined in the committing Magistrate's Court is not examined in the Sessions Court, it is open to the Judge either to draw an adverse inference against the Crown or to examine the witness as a court-witness. But the Judge cannot compel the prosecution to examine such witness as a prosecution witness or to tender him for cross-examination.²⁰

7. Examination must be oral. — The examination referred to in this section means oral examination of the witnesses present (except in cases where evidence is taken by commission or where the witness is deaf or dumb). Oral examination is, therefore, the general rule, and it is of utmost importance that the rule should be followed in all cases where the witness is present to be examined. The demeanour of the witness may be important for the assessor or Judge in forming an opinion of his truth.¹

8. Using depositions given before the Magistrate. — See Ss. 288 and 353 and the Notes thereunder.

9. Attendance of witnesses. — See Section 216.

10. Cross-examination to follow examination-in-chief. — The cross-examination of every witness should follow his examination-in-chief. See section 138 of the Evidence Act of 1872. It is both irregular and inconvenient to allow all the witnesses to be examined one day and to reserve the cross-examination to a subsequent date.¹ The accused is, therefore, not entitled as of right to postponement of the cross-examination. The Court may, however, grant such a postponement on reasonable grounds as, for instance, where the counsel is unprepared,²

11. Improper examination.—As to the impropriety of putting leading questions to or cross-examining its own witness by the prosecution or defence, see Ss. 142, 143 and 154 of the Evidence Act and the undermentioned cases.¹

explain clearly by evidence circumstances having material bearing on the case.^{6a}

It is the duty of the Public Prosecutor to give opportunity to his witnesses to explain any discrepancies or contradictions in their depositions.⁷ But he is not expected to call witnesses with reference to defence theories.⁸ Nor is it open to him to call evidence to rebut and discredit the accused's defence before it is even known whether or not the accused intends to put forward that defence.⁹

It is no part of the prosecution's duty to suggest a motive for a crime nor is it the duty of the Court to determine why the crime was omitted.¹⁰

14. Trial ought not to be stopped before the close of the prosecution. — Sessions cases cannot be tried piece-meal. Before commencing a trial a Judge should satisfy himself that all necessary evidence is available. If it is not, he may postpone the case; but once having commenced he should, except for some very pressing reason, proceed de die in diem till the trial is finished,¹ the intention of the Code being that a trial before the Court of Session should proceed and be dealt with continuously from its inception to its finish.²

Where, after the examination of some prosecution witnesses, some more remain to be examined, it is not open to the Judge to ask the jury whether they wish to hear any more evidence and, on their stating that they do not believe the evidence and wish to stop the case, record a verdict of acquittal; such a procedure is not warranted by law and no final opinion as to the reliability or otherwise of the evidence ought to be arrived at by the Judge or jury until the whole evidence is before them and has been considered.³

15. Treatment of witnesses. — A Sessions Judge is not justified in stopping the cross-examination and turning the witness out of the confession before the Sessions Judge.⁴ Similarly, the accused is entitled to rely on such statement to prove points in his favour though under the ordinary law of evidence, he would not be entitled to make use of self-serving statements by him as evidence in his favour.⁵

The section does not contemplate that the committing Magistrate should be called as a witness in the Sessions Court and examined with reference to the recorded statement.⁶ In fact, the record of the statement prepared by the committing Magistrate would be the only evidence admissible to prove the statement. (See Evidence Act, s. 91.) But, under s. 533, if, in recording the statement any of the provisions of s. 364 are not complied with, evidence may be taken for the purpose of proving that the statement was made by the accused before the committing Magistrate.

The section does not prescribe the stage at which the statement of the accused should be produced and read as evidence. But it has been held that the statement should be read as part of the case for the prosecution before the accused enters upon his defence.⁷

The statement of the accused must be read as a whole. Thus, where there are several accused in a case, and the statement made by one of them in the committing Magistrate's Court is read in the Sessions Court under this section, the portions touching the other accused cannot be omitted.⁸ But under s. 310, if any portion of the statement bears on an alleged previous conviction charged against the accused, for the purpose of affecting the sentence to be passed on him in case of conviction, such portion should not be read or referred to unless and until the accused has been convicted of the subsequent offence or the verdict of the jury has been delivered or the opinion of the assessors has been recorded.

2. "Duly recorded." — An accused person made a confession under improper inducement by the police. The committing Magistrate admitted the confession in evidence and examined the accused with regard to it. It was held that as the confession was not admissible in evidence (Evidence Act, s. 24) the committing Magistrate ought not to have questioned the accused with reference to it and that the examination of the accused under the circumstances could not be said to be "duly recorded" within the meaning of this section and could not be produced in evidence in the Sessions Court under this section.¹ So also, an admission made by the accused before the committing Magistrate in answer to questions by the latter, when there is no evidence implicating the accused is not 'duly recorded'.²

As to the mode of recording the examination of the accused, see S. 364 and the Notes thereunder. As to the effect of irregularities in the mode of recording the examination, see S. 533 and Notes thereunder.

3. "Committing Magistrate."—The words "committing Magistrate" in the section include the Magistrate who held the preliminary enquiry on which the commitment was based, although the actual order of commitment was made by some other Magistrate. Hence, the statement of the accused recorded by a Magistrate who held the preliminary enquiry is admissible under this section although the case was actually committed to the sessions by some other Magistrate.¹ Thus, where a Magistrate who succeeds to the jurisdiction of another Magistrate commits a case to the sessions under S. 350 on evidence recorded by his predecessor, the statement of the accused recorded by such predecessor is admissible under this section.²

1. Legislative changes.

- (1) There was no corresponding section in the Code of 1861. The section was first enacted in the Code of 1872. The undermentioned are cases decided under the Code of 1861.¹
- (2) The words "duly recorded in the presence of the accused under Chapter XVIII" were substituted for the words "duly taken in the presence of the accused before the committing Magistrate," and the words "for all purposes subject to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872," were inserted at the end of the section by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, XVIII of 1923.

2. Scope, object and applicability of the section. — This section provides that when a witness is produced and examined in the Sessions Court, his evidence in the commitment proceedings may, in the discretion of the presiding Judge, be treated as evidence at the trial for all purposes. But for this section such evidence would, under the Evidence Act, be only admissible for the purpose of corroborating or contradicting the witness (see Ss. 145, 155 and 157 of the Evidence Act).¹ It would not be admissible as substantive evidence, i. e., for proving the truth of the facts deposed to, except when the witness is not produced in the Sessions Court for any of the reasons specified in S. 33 of the Evidence Act. The present section vests a discretion in the Sessions Judge to treat such evidence as substantive evidence in the case though none of the conditions laid down in S. 33 of the Evidence Act is present.^{1a} The object of the section is to reduce the danger of witnesses being tampered with between the commitment and trial.²

The section does not ipso facto make the evidence before the committing Magistrate evidence at the trial. It only confers a discretion on the Sessions Judge to treat as evidence before himself the evidence of a witness given before the committing Magistrate.^{2a} But, where under the Evidence Act, the evidence given before the committing Magistrate can be used at the sessions trial for any purpose, this section in no way restricts such user.³

The power conferred by the section is intended to be exercised with reference to each witness individually. The section does not contemplate a general order being passed with reference to the evidence of all the witnesses or a number of them together.⁴

The section applies only to sessions trials and not to trials before Magistrates.⁵ But it applies to trials with assessors as well as to trials by jury.⁶ In the undermentioned case⁷ it was remarked that the section applies only to prosecution witnesses and that the position of the section shows this.

The reasons given by the Magistrate in discharging the accused at first and the contents of the Sessions Judge's order in revision directing further inquiry are not admissible in evidence in the Sessions Court when the case is committed to sessions subsequently.⁸

3. "Duly recorded in the presence of the accused." — This section applies only to the evidence of a witness duly recorded in the presence of the accused by the committing Magistrate. Hence, the existence of a record or memorandum of evidence is a condition precedent to the applicability of the section.¹

Further, the evidence must have been duly recorded. (As to the mode of recording evidence in commitment proceedings, see Chapter XXV of the Code.) Under S. 208 and on general principles, the accused is entitled as of right to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses (in commitment proceedings). Hence, the evidence of prosecution witnesses recorded without the accused being allowed to cross-examine them is not "duly recorded" and cannot be introduced into the record under this section.² But where the accused has declined to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses in spite of opportunity being given to him to do so, the absence of cross-examination by him does not affect the admissibility of the evidence under this section.³

The section requires also that the evidence in the committing Magistrate's Court should have been recorded in the presence of the accused. Hence, evidence recorded in the absence of the accused cannot be admitted under this section.⁴

See also the undermentioned case.⁵

4. "Under Chapter XVIII." — This section applies only to the evidence of a witness recorded under chapter XVIII. The statement of a witness made on any other occasion is not within the section.¹

Prior to the amendment of 1923 the words "before the committing Magistrate" occurred in the section in the place of the words "under chapter XVIII." The amendment makes it clear that evidence recorded under chapter XVIII falls within the section although it is not recorded with a view to commitment. Thus, evidence recorded under S. 219, after commitment, would fall within the section.²

Section 288
Notes 4-5

There is no special procedure provided for the recording of evidence under chapter XVIII. Hence, the evidence recorded by a Magistrate in a case which he starts with a view to trial by himself but which he subsequently decides to commit to the sessions can be held to be evidence recorded under chapter XVIII.³

5. "Discretion of the presiding Judge." — The section leaves it to the discretion of the presiding Judge whether or not to admit the evidence referred to in it.¹ But the power being one in derogation of the general principle that a Court can only act on the evidence given before it (see definition of evidence in the Evidence Act, S. 3), the decision to let in the previous deposition of a witness under this section should be arrived at after careful consideration and only where there are sound and reasonable grounds for such a decision.² The desire to expedite the trial or the fact that the counsel for both the sides have agreed to this course, is not a sufficient reason for acting under the section.³ The power should be confined to cases where the Judge has reason to think that a witness has deposed truly before the committing Magistrate but is not telling the truth before himself and that it is desirable in the interests of justice that the previous deposition of the witness should be brought on the record of the trial.⁴

But the Judge will not be justified in exercising his power under this section where there are only minor discrepancies between statements made before the committing Magistrate and before himself.^{4a} When the witness alleges that his statement before the committing Magistrate was the result of improper influence or pressure, the Sessions Judge should investigate into the truth of his allegation before coming to the conclusion that his deposition in the Sessions Court (which contradicts that in the committing Magistrate's Court) is false.⁵ See also Note 7.

6. "If such witness is produced and examined." — It is a condition precedent to the incorporation of the previous deposition of a witness under this section that he should be produced and examined as a witness at the sessions trial.¹ The examination contemplated is examination of the witness in the ordinary way. Hence, mere cross-examination of a witness or merely tendering a witness for cross-examination is not sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the section in this respect.² So also, the mere examination of a witness as to the fact of his having made the previous deposition is not enough for allowing action under this section.³

such a course is expressly provided for by the Evidence Act. Nor does the expression mean that the prior depositions can be used as evidence in every case in which there is no express provision in the Evidence Act prohibiting such a course. The expression only means that the evidence admitted under this section is subject to the same rules as to admissibility and relevancy as any other evidence and that a Judge is not at liberty to admit irrelevant evidence under this section merely because it happens to be the deposition of a witness given before the committing Magistrate.³

As seen already, the evidence admitted under this section constitutes substantive evidence in the case quite as much as any other evidence. There is no legal objection to a conviction being based purely on the prior deposition of a witness admitted under this section.^{3a} But as a matter of prudence, before preferring the evidence given before the committing Magistrate to that given before himself and acting on such evidence, a Judge should have very substantial grounds for doing so.⁴ Especially, it would be highly unsafe to use as corroboration of a

The whole of the prior statement of a witness and not merely portions of it should be treated as evidence in the case.⁶

8. Corroboration of evidence admitted under this section.

— The prior deposition of a witness before the committing Magistrate admitted under this section stands on the same footing as any other evidence in the case (see Note 7). Hence, it is “testimony” within the meaning of S. 157 of the Evidence Act, and can be corroborated by means of prior statements of the witness of the kind mentioned in that section.¹ Thus, when the evidence of a witness in the committing Magistrate’s Court is transferred to the file of the Sessions Court under this section, a prior statement of the witness recorded under S. 164 can be used to corroborate the evidence.² But under S. 162, a statement made to the police would not be admissible for such a purpose.³ Further, a statement of the witness recorded under S.164 which corroborates his deposition before the committing Magistrate admitted under this section cannot be treated as substantive evidence.⁴

9. Practice and procedure. — Before introducing into the record the statement of a witness made before the committing Magistrate, the Judge is bound to inform the accused and the prosecution of his intention to do so. The reason is that otherwise the parties will have no opportunity of testing the statement by cross-examination or of otherwise dealing with it as part of the material which may influence the decision of the Court.¹

When the evidence of a witness before the committing Magistrate is inconsistent with his evidence in the Sessions Court and it is proposed to use his previous statement under this section, it is the duty of the Judge to draw his attention to his previous statement and afford him an opportunity of explaining the inconsistency between his two statements.² See Evidence Act, S. 145.

Hence, where an approver is examined as a witness in the committing Magistrate's Court and is again examined as a witness in the Sessions Court, his evidence before the committing Magistrate can be introduced under this section into the record of the sessions case, notwithstanding that he has repudiated his former statement.¹ But it would be unsafe to base a conviction on the retracted statement of an approver in the absence of any corroboration.² See also S. 337 Note 16.

1. Legislative changes.

1. The corresponding s. 372 of the Code of 1861 contained a single clause that the accused should be called upon to enter on his defence after the close of the prosecution evidence.

2. The first two clauses of s. 251 of the Code of 1872 contained similar provisions, clause (1) thereof corresponding to sub-ss. (1) and (2) and clause (2) to sub-s. (4) of the present section.

3. Section 289 of the Code of 1882 is the same as the present section.

2. When the examination of witnesses for prosecution is concluded. — The general principle is that an accused person is entitled to know what the evidence against him is before he is called upon to enter on his defence.¹ This section accordingly provides that he is to be called upon to enter on his defence only after the examination of the prosecution witnesses is concluded.² The closing of the case for the prosecution is thus not mere form but with certain exceptions closes the door to any further evidence against the accused; the prosecutor cannot re-open his case and make additions to it except such voluntary additions as the accused may make himself,³ and except for the purpose of contradicting any new case set up by the accused in his defence.⁴ If for any reason the Court re-calls any prosecution witness after the accused has made his defence, the accused should be given a further opportunity of calling evidence with reference to the evidence so recorded.⁵ The Court should wait before proceeding under this section till all the evidence on the side of the prosecution is concluded;^{5a} it cannot proceed under this section in the course of the prosecution evidence because it does not believe the evidence so far tendered.⁶

3. After the examination, if any, of the accused. — The words "if any" would appear to suggest that the examination of the accused is not always necessary in a sessions trial. This, however, is not so. The words are intended to cover only those cases where the accused has no circumstances to explain, as for instance, where he has admitted his guilt, and are not intended to relax the imperative provisions of S. 342 in sessions trials.¹

Consequently, before an accused person is called upon to enter on his defence, he should be examined as to whether he has anything to say regarding the evidence against him,² even if he had been examined with great care before the committing Magistrate, because it makes a considerable difference to listeners like the jurors whether a previous statement is read over to them or the accused is examined in their presence so that they may see his demeanour.³

4. "The accused shall be asked whether he means to adduce evidence." — After the conclusion of the prosecution evidence the Court is bound to ask the accused person if he means to adduce evidence and the accused himself cannot waive the benefit of such a provision.¹ The words "adduce evidence" in sub-s. (1) do not mean the same thing as the words "enter on his defence" in sub-s. (4). It is only where at a later stage, the Court considers that there is evidence that the accused person committed the offence that the accused is to be called upon to enter on his defence.²

5. "The prosecutor may sum up his case" — Sub-section (2). — The prosecutor may sum up his case only if the accused says he does not mean to adduce evidence. In a case where several persons are tried together the word "he" in sub-ss. (2) and (4) should be construed to apply to all the accused together and so a prosecutor may sum up only if all the accused say they do not mean to adduce evidence.¹

6. Where there is no evidence that the accused committed the offence. — The words "no evidence" in sub-s. (2) mean merely that there is not on the record any evidence which, even if true, would amount to legal proof of the offence charged against the accused; they cannot be extended to mean no satisfactory, trustworthy or conclusive evidence.¹ The real test in deciding whether there is evidence or not is to see whether a Judge, at a trial held with the aid of jurors, could say that there was no evidence which could go before the jury.² However, a mere scintilla of evidence is not enough to justify the Judge in leaving a case to the jury. There must be evidence from which they might reasonably conclude the fact to be established.³ The "evidence" referred to is the evidence let in on behalf of the prosecution. So, where the only evidence is the confession of a co-accused⁴ or the evidence of witnesses of a co-accused,⁵ it is a case of

"no evidence" within the meaning of this section. The evidence contemplated by sub-s. (2) includes both direct and circumstantial evidence.⁶ The words "no evidence" do not, however, mean absence of evidence on behalf of the prosecution owing to failure of witnesses to attend. So, where the prosecution could not adduce evidence owing to failure of witnesses to attend, the Court cannot treat it as a case of "no evidence" and proceed under this section.⁷

7. Record a finding of not guilty.—If the Court considers that there is no evidence, it can, in a case tried with the aid of assessors, itself record a finding of not guilty even without taking the opinions of the assessors, but if there is some evidence, though not trustworthy, satisfactory or conclusive, the Court must record the opinions of assessors before recording a finding of not guilty.¹ But the Court cannot, purporting to act under this section, record a finding of not guilty where it considers the charge itself improper.² Where there is no evidence the Judge should enter a verdict of acquittal; there is no warrant for a finding of "not proven."³

8. "Direct the jury to return a verdict of not guilty." — If in a case tried by a jury there is no legal evidence that the accused committed the offence, the Court should direct the jury to return a verdict of "not guilty." It must not leave it to the jury to express their opinion since a finding of guilty by the jury under such circumstances cannot be sustained,¹ even if there is some evidence available but not called by the prosecution.² The direction of a Judge that there is no evidence that the accused committed an offence is binding on the jury and must be followed by them and where the Judge, in such a case, directs the jury to return a verdict of "not guilty," the jury must accept that opinion whether they agree with it or not; a return of verdict of guilty in such a case cannot be accepted.³ The Court cannot forbear from directing a return of a verdict of not guilty if there is no evidence, even on the ground that the case of a co-accused is likely to be prejudiced thereby.⁴ But if there is some evidence the case must go before the jury and the Court cannot direct a verdict of not guilty because it disbelieves the evidence.⁵

A Court of Session, unlike a High Court, has no power to stay proceedings under S. 273 on unsustainable charges and all that it can do after hearing the evidence and coming to the conclusion that there is no evidence that the accused committed the offence, is to direct the jury to return a verdict of not guilty, but it cannot do so before the commencement of the trial. This provision is meant for remedying any suspicion of injustice under which the accused may labour in respect of what he considers to be a committal on insufficient evidence.⁶

9. "Shall call on the accused to enter on his defence" — Sub-section (4). — The calling upon an accused person to enter on his defence under this sub-section is not a mere formality but is an essential part of a criminal trial.¹ So, where there is some evidence on behalf of the prosecution which might go before a jury, the Court should call upon the accused to enter on his defence² after the close of the prosecution evidence and summing up by the prosecutor.³ As to whether a failure to call upon the accused to enter upon his defence is an irregularity covered by S. 537, see Note 11.

Where several persons are tried together, even if one of them offers to adduce evidence, all of them should be called upon to enter on their defence and they must follow one another in their defence, since there cannot be a summing up only in the case of accused not adducing evidence and a right of reply as against others.⁴ Since in a criminal case the burden of proof is on the prosecution and the conviction must be based on evidence which excludes the theory of innocence,⁵ the accused should be called upon to enter on his defence only if the evidence is such as to enable the Court to 'judge' rather than conjecture.⁶ For the same reason no adverse inference can be drawn against the accused if he fails to adduce evidence even if he had, in answer to a question under the first part of this section, undertaken to adduce evidence.⁷ If the accused makes any statement in his defence, it ought to be recorded. If he does not voluntarily make any statement or declines to answer questions under S. 342, the facts should be noted. When there is nothing else to show the nature of the defence, a note of the address to the Court under S. 290, if any, should be recorded. The record is not complete unless it shows the nature of the defence set up.⁸

Where the accused calls no witnesses, the clause means that he or his pleader is to make his final address to the Court.⁹

10. Procedure where the witnesses for the accused are absent. — Where due to a mistake the witnesses for the defence were not in attendance, not having been summoned by the Magistrate, it was held that the trial should be adjourned and the accused should be given an opportunity to examine his witnesses by summoning them if necessary,¹ after calling upon him to enter on his defence.²

11. Effect of non-compliance with the section. — The criminal proceedings are bad unless they are conducted in the manner prescribed by law and if they are substantially bad in themselves, the defect will not be cured by any consent or waiver on the part of the accused.¹ Thus, it is irregular to record the prosecution evidence after the accused has entered on his defence,² but it is only an irregularity which does not vitiate the trial if there has been no prejudice caused to the accused by reason of such irregularity.³

Note 11

Where the Court records a finding of not guilty or directs the jury to return a verdict of not guilty without recording the opinions of the assessors, or the verdict of the jury, as the case may be, in a case where there is enough evidence to go to the jury, the Court acts without jurisdiction and the trial is illegal.⁴ But the Calcutta High Court has held, under similar circumstances, that it is only an irregularity which does not vitiate the trial if there is no prejudice to the other accused.⁵ Where there is no evidence and the jury returns a verdict of guilty by reason of the Judge not directing them to give a verdict of not guilty, the conviction is bad in law.⁶ Entering upon defence on being called upon to do so marks a special stage in, and is an essential part of, a criminal trial. Omission to call upon the accused to enter on his defence, according to the Calcutta High Court⁷ and the Chief Court of Lower Burma,⁸ cannot but occasion failure of justice and conviction consequent thereon must be set aside. But the High Courts of Allahabad⁹ and Madras¹⁰ have taken the view that it is only an irregularity which does not vitiate the trial if there has been no prejudice to the accused. Where the accused is not asked if he means to adduce evidence, his conviction is liable to be set aside.¹¹

1. Defence. — The last section (S. 289) provides that if after the prosecution evidence is taken in a sessions trial the Court considers that there is evidence that the accused committed the offence, he should be called upon to enter on his defence. This and the next section provide for the procedure to be followed in conducting the defence.

The accused is entitled to set up any defence, technical or otherwise.¹ There is no legal bar to his raising even inconsistent defences.² Thus, he can raise a defence of alibi as well as of private defence.³ But the defence will become weaker by inconsistent pleas being raised.⁴

The record of the trial should show the nature of the defence set up.⁵ The nature of the defence is to be gathered not only from the statement of the accused but also from the trend of cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and the arguments of the defence pleader.⁶

Though under S. 105 of the Evidence Act the burden of proving that the case of the accused falls within one of the general exceptions in the Penal Code is on him, it is not necessary that he should specifically raise such a plea. A Court is bound to give effect to a plea of private defence if it is made out on the evidence, though it is not specifically raised by the accused.⁷

The accused is not bound to disclose the nature of his defence in the committing Magistrate's Court.⁸ Nor is he bound to disclose his defence in the Sessions Court till he is called on to enter upon his defence.⁹ But if he means to bring any charges against the prosecution (e. g., a charge of fraud) as part of his defence, there is an equitable rule that he should disclose his intention during the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses so that the prosecution may have an opportunity of explaining matters. Unless such an opportunity is given to the prosecution, the defence so far as it is based on the allegations against the prosecution, must fail.¹⁰

The accused can raise a new defence at a late stage of the case; but unless it can be said that such a defence could not have been raised earlier, the weight to be attached to it will suffer.¹¹

See also S. 256 Note 10 and S. 342 Note 29.

2. Accused's right to examine witnesses. — When a prisoner puts forward a distinct defence and cites witnesses but such witnesses on their appearance in Court say that they know nothing in prisoner's favour, it is the duty of the Judge, instead of dismissing them at once, to question them with a view to see if there is any truth in the defence.¹

It is no part of the duty of a Judge to examine a witness for the accused when his pleader has refused to do so and the accused has not raised any objection.²

See section 291 and Notes thereunder.

3. Accused's right to cross-examine witnesses. — An accused is entitled to cross-examine the witnesses of a co-accused whose case is adverse to his own.¹

Where a witness examined by the prosecution in the committing Magistrate's Court is given up by the prosecution and the accused thereafter calls him as his own witness, the accused cannot cross-examine him, the reason being that the Evidence Act gives the right of cross-

Summing up after evidence — Right of. — When there are more than one accused in a case, their pleaders should be allowed to sum up their respective cases after the evidence for all the accused has been taken.¹ Any arbitrary and undue curtailment by the Court of the parties' right of argument is to be deprecated.²

5. Evidence in criminal cases. — The burden of proving the guilt of the accused in all criminal cases is on the prosecution.¹ There is no obligation on the accused to produce any evidence in his defence in the first instance.² Unless and until the prosecution has established a prima facie case against the accused, no adverse inference can be drawn against him from the non-production of any evidence by him.³ Similarly, the accused cannot be convicted merely on the ground of the weakness or falsity of his defence.⁴ The prosecution cannot seek to use an admission in the accused's statement to fill up a gap in the prosecution evidence.⁵ A conviction cannot be based merely on suspicion.⁶ Where the prosecution evidence is not conclusive about the guilt of the accused and there is doubt, the accused is entitled to the benefit of doubt and must be acquitted.⁷ But where the prosecution has established a prima facie case against the accused, it is for him to explain the incriminating circumstances appearing against him.⁸ See also S. 367 Note 6.

sections 211 and 231, be entitled of right to have any witness summoned, other than the witnesses named in the list delivered to the Magistrate by whom he was committed for trial.

Synopsis

1. Scope of the section.
2. Examination of witnesses present in Court.
3. Right to issue of process for compelling attendance of witnesses.

Other Topics (miscellaneous)

Adjournment for summoning new witnesses. See Note 3.	Summons refused by Magistrate—Issued by Sessions Court. See Note 3.
Refusal to summon witnesses named—Delay. See Note 3.	Witness not previously named but present. See Note 2.

1. Scope of the section.— This section entitles the accused to examine in his defence in the Sessions Court all witnesses who are present whether they have been named by him previously or not. It also entitles him to the assistance of the Court in compelling the attendance of all those witnesses who were included by him in the list of witnesses delivered by him to the committing Magistrate under S. 211. As it is a frequent ground of appeal against a conviction by the Sessions Court that the Court refused or omitted to examine witnesses for the defence, the Court should be careful to note specifically in the record whether the accused elected to call any witnesses in his defence or refused to do so and whether the witnesses called by him were examined.¹

2. Examination of witnesses present in Court.— Under this section, the accused is entitled as of right to examine as a witness in his defence any person who is present in the Court notwithstanding that he was not named by him previously as his witness.¹ A fortiori if a witness included in the list delivered by the accused to the committing Magistrate under S. 211 is present in Court, the Court is bound to allow him to be examined.² In the undermentioned case³ it was held that if the accused insists on the examination of a witness in attendance who had been discharged before, the Court may, if it thinks that the interests of justice would be served, allow him to be examined.

3. Right to issue of process for compelling attendance of witnesses.— This section provides that except in certain cases the accused is not entitled as of right to the issue of summons to any witness not included in the list delivered by him to the committing Magistrate under S. 211. Nor can he insist on an adjournment being granted to enable him to examine any such witness.¹ But it is open to the Sessions Court in the exercise of its discretion to issue summons for the attendance of such witnesses² and ordinarily, an application by an accused for summons ought not to be refused if there is time to secure the attendance of the witnesses before the conclusion of the trial.³

In the case of witnesses included in the list delivered by the accused to the committing Magistrate under section 211, Ss. 216 and 217 provide that they should be summoned to give evidence before the Sessions Court or, if they have been examined before the committing Magistrate, should be required to execute bonds binding themselves to give evidence in the Sessions Court. If any of them fail to appear in the Sessions Court, the accused is entitled as of right to the issue of process to compel their attendance⁴ or to an adjournment of the case to enable him to secure their attendance.⁵ This right of the accused applies not only to the witnesses included in the list which the committing Magistrate is bound to accept under S. 211 sub-s.(1), but also to those included in the list which he accepts in the exercise of his discretion under sub-s.(2) of that section.⁶

But the right of the accused to issue of process is one that can be waived by him. Hence, if the accused has said that he does not wish to examine any witness, but requests for process at a late stage of the case, the Court may decline to comply with his request.⁷ Similarly, where the Court directs the accused to make his application for summons early but the latter delays and applies for summons at the last moment, his application may be rejected.⁸ But the accused is not bound to apply for summons before he is called on to enter upon his defence.⁹

Where the committing Magistrate has, in the exercise of his discretion under S. 216, refused to issue summons to a certain witness and the accused applies to the Sessions Court for summons to such witness, the Sessions Court can issue such summons.¹⁰ The Sessions Court has power under this section to re-call a prosecution witness for cross-examination by the accused when the accused had no opportunity of cross-examining him before.¹¹

1. Object of the section. — The object of the Legislature in enacting this section is to give each side an opportunity to comment upon the evidence let in by the other and not to give an additional advantage to the prosecutor.¹

There is no similar provision so far as the trial of warrant-cases is concerned; but it has been held that even in such cases, both the prosecutor and the accused should be allowed to address arguments to the Court after the evidence is let in.²

2. Prosecutor, meaning of. — Section 270 provides that in every trial before a Court of Session, the prosecution shall be conducted by a Public Prosecutor. The "Prosecutor" in this section therefore means the Public Prosecutor.

Sections 492 and 493 provide for the appointment of Public Prosecutors, the latter also providing that if a private person instructs a pleader to prosecute in any Court any person, in any such case such pleader shall act under the directions of the Public Prosecutor. See Notes to those sections.

3. "If the accused or any of the accused." — Where one of several accused persons tried jointly calls witnesses at the trial but the other accused call no witnesses, the prosecutor has the right of reply on the whole case. He is not to sum up as to such of the accused as do not call evidence and reply on the evidence that may have been adduced by the others.¹ Where, however, the accused are indicted under separate counts in the same indictment, the charges are distinct and the prosecutor has a right of reply upon that prisoner only in whose behalf evidence was called.²

4. Extent of right of reply.—If any of the accused lets in oral evidence, the prosecutor is entitled to reply; such reply need not be confined to the evidence let in by such accused, but may be as against all the accused and generally on the whole case.¹ Where under clause (c) of this section, only documents are put in and no oral evidence is let in on behalf of the accused, the prosecutor can only comment upon such documents, but cannot, except with the permission of the Court, address on the whole case.

5. Production of document in cross-examination of prosecution witness — Right of reply. — Section 292 of the Code of 1882 provided that the Prosecutor had a right of reply where the accused or any of the accused had stated, when asked under S. 289, that he meant to adduce evidence. It was, however, held by the Calcutta High Court¹ that where the accused did not in fact adduce any evidence, there was no right of reply even though he had stated when questioned under S. 289 that he meant to adduce evidence. There was also a conflict of opinions on the question whether, where the accused filed documents in cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses, he must be taken to have adduced evidence so as to give the Prosecutor a right of reply.²

Under the section as it stood before the amendment of 1923, the Prosecutor had a right of reply where the accused or any of the accused adduced any evidence. This, however, did not settle the conflict on the question whether the filing of a document in cross-examination of the prosecution witness gave the Prosecutor a right of reply.³

Notes 5-6

The present amended section has set the conflict at rest. The right of reply now depends upon the accused adducing oral evidence after the close of the prosecution case, or by the production of a document after he enters on his defence. The filing of a document during the cross-examination of the prosecution witness will not give the Prosecutor a right of reply.⁴

6. Reply wrongly allowed — Effect. — Where the Prosecutor is wrongly allowed to reply in a case in which there is no right of reply, the irregularity is not one which will vitiate the whole proceedings or which will call for a re-trial even from the stage at which the error arose.¹

(2) Such officer shall not, except with the permission of the Court, suffer any other person to speak to, or hold any communication with, any of the jury or assessors, and, unless the Court otherwise directs, they shall, when the view is finished, be immediately conducted back into Court.

the jury or assessors in sessions cases. Section 539B provides for similar inspection by Magistrates and Judges.¹ See S. 539B and Notes thereunder.

2. "Whenever the Court thinks." — It is only in cases where the Court considers that an inspection would assist the jury or the assessors, in determining whether the charge is true or false, that it should be ordered. Where the charge against a prisoner was that he made certain statements on oath knowing them to be false (the statement being that one M threatened to cut the tree), it was held that a local inspection as to the condition of tree was not material to the case.¹ See also the undermentioned case.²

3. Jury or assessors not to hold communication with any other person. — It is imperative that the jury or assessors should not have any extra-judicial knowledge of the facts in the case: they are to decide the case on the legal evidence taken by the Judge. Where a Sessions Judge directed the assessors to make an inspection of the locality and also instructed them to examine witnesses if they desire to do so, the High Court condemned the procedure and held that in asking the assessors to take evidence, he was "abdicating his own high functions."¹

294.* If a juror or assessor is personally acquainted with any relevant fact, it is his duty to inform the Judge that such is the case, whereupon he may be sworn, examined, cross-examined and re-examined in the same manner as any other witness.

When juror or assessors may be examined.

1. Scope and object of the section. — The principle of this section is that no man shall be convicted except on evidence which he has had an opportunity of testing by cross-examination and of contradicting the same by rebutting evidence.¹ A juror or assessor is expected to form and give his opinion on the evidence given at the trial and not to act upon his personal knowledge of any relevant facts of the case without giving evidence of the same as a witness in the case.²

Where at the end of a trial one of the assessors expresses his opinion as to the guilt of the accused basing his opinion on his own

295.* If a trial is adjourned, the jury or assessors shall attend at the adjourned sitting, and at every subsequent sitting, until the conclusion of the trial.

Jury or assessors to attend at adjourned sitting.

1. Adjournment of sessions case. — Where a sessions case is adjourned, the jury or assessors are bound, under this section, to attend the adjourned hearing. A failure to attend will be punishable under section 392.

296.† The High Court may, from time to time, make rules as to keeping the jury together during a trial before such Court lasting for more than one day; and subject to such rules, the presiding Judge may order whether and in what manner the jurors shall be kept together under the charge of an officer of the Court, or whether they shall be allowed to return to their respective homes.

1. Scope and object of the section. — This section touches on the undesirability of separation of the jury before their verdict is given,¹ and empowers the High Courts to make rules for "locking them up" during trial. The jury are not entitled to talk to persons connected with the accused during the progress of the trial.² Where one of the jurors during the trial of a case expressed his opinion outside Court as to the guilt of the accused person and made a fairly distinct intimation that he had formed an opinion to that effect, it was

1. Legislative changes.

Changes introduced in the Code of 1872 —

- (1) The words “when the case for the defence and the Prosecutor’s reply, if any, are concluded the Court shall proceed to charge,” etc., were introduced, thereby showing the stage at which the Court should address the jury.
- (2) The words “and laying down the law by which the jury are to be guided” were also added thereby throwing on the Judge the duty of explaining the law to the jury.

Changes introduced in the Code of 1882 —

The words “A statement of the Judge’s direction to the jury shall form part of the record” which occurred in the former Code were omitted.

2. Object of charge to jury. — In a trial by jury the jurors are the sole judges of all questions of fact; their verdict on questions of fact cannot be set aside on appeal (ss. 418, 423). It is therefore of supreme importance that they should be given all the guidance and help that may be necessary for arriving at a correct decision on questions of fact. The object of this section is to furnish such guidance and help.¹ It is the duty of the Judge to place the case before the jury in such a way as to enable them to come to a reasonable and fair conclusion.² Jurors are ordinarily men who are not used to analyse, sift and weigh the evidence and it is quite impossible for them to retain in their memory the whole of the facts which have been detailed before them.³ In the absence of intelligent guidance and assistance from the

Judge, few juries, in a contested case, would be able to come to an unanimous opinion, being left in a state of great perplexity by the influence of speeches of the contending lawyers.⁴ Every party to a trial by jury has, therefore, a legal and constitutional right to have the case which he has made either in pursuit or in defence, fairly submitted to that tribunal.⁵ The section accordingly makes it incumbent upon the Judge to charge the jury before their verdict is taken.⁶

The duties of the Judge in charging the jury are laid down by this section and the next but they are not exhaustive ; they must be read together with numerous judicial decisions on the point.⁷

3. Judge, if should himself charge the jury. — The right course for the Judge is to charge the jury himself; but where there are difficulties in the way of doing this, as when the Judge does not happen to be sufficiently acquainted with the vernacular language so as to be understood by the jury, his delivering the charge through another person is not improper.¹

4. Charge as to part only of case. — The law does not recognize intermediate verdicts of jurors ; the Judge should address the jury on the whole case before taking their verdict ; he should not ask for their verdict on one issue reserving his address on other questions of fact.¹

5. "When the case for the defence are concluded."

— The stage at which the Judge is to address the jury is when the prosecution and the defence have let in all their evidence and after the arguments, if any, of the prosecution and the defence : a charge before that will be premature.¹ It is illegal to allow the jury to pronounce their verdict, before the accused is called upon to enter on his defence.² After the prisoner claims to be tried, all the evidence, whether statements of witnesses or admissions of the prisoner, should be placed before the jury.³ It is not open to a Judge after hearing some of the prosecution witnesses to ask the jury whether they wish to hear any more evidence, and on their stating that they do not believe the evidence and wish to stop the case, to record a verdict of acquittal. He is bound to allow the whole evidence to be placed before the jury.⁴ Only in cases where, under s. 289, the Judge finds that there is no evidence to go to the jury, can the case be withdrawn from the jury : in all other cases the full facts should be placed before them and then the charge should be delivered.⁵

6. Summing up the evidence for the prosecution and defence. — A charge to the jury consists of :

- (1) summing up the evidence for the prosecution and defence, and
- (2) laying down the law by which the jury are to be guided.

Under this section the Judge is bound to sum up the evidence whether or not the jury desire him to do so.¹ The summing up of the evidence is the presentation to the jury of a summary of the evidence as it appears on the negative and affirmative sides of the case.² The summing up should not be in the nature of a judgment and the Judge should not give his opinions as definite facts.³ It is not necessary to read over to the jury all the evidence in extenso.⁴ In fact it will be anything but helpful to the jury to take the witnesses one by one in the order of their examination and to place their disconnected statements.⁵ Though it is not necessary for a Judge to read his notes of the evidence to the jury, he is not legally prohibited from asking the jury whether they have a particular piece of evidence in mind or whether it would help them for him to read his notes.⁶ The Judge should group the depositions of the witnesses in such a way as to direct the attention of the jury to the evidence regarding each particular fact sought to be proved.⁷ He should sift, analyse and marshal the facts in order to enable the jury to weigh the evidence intelligently, to estimate the value of each part of it with the rest.⁸ But it is not possible for any Judge to bring all the important facts together in one place in the charge for the benefit of the jury. Where there are a large number of important points to be discussed, it is necessary that some of those points should be separated by some considerable time from the other items of the charge.⁹

The charge should be characterised by clearness, coherence¹⁰ and sequence¹¹ and great care should be taken to place the evidence accurately and with precision.¹² It should not be colourless and should not fail to bring before the jury the main circumstances in the case.¹³ It should be delivered in direct and simple language. Involved expressions, high-flown, imaginative and fanciful language¹⁴ and slang or colloquial phrases¹⁵ should be avoided. The aim of a jury trial is not a psychological examination of the mentality of jurors; it is concerned with the definite proof of a distinct offence and the use of language tending to divert the attention of the jury from the main issue to a subsidiary point should be avoided.¹⁶ As observed in *Molla Khan v. Where there is no suggestion that the summing up was open to any objection, it should be assumed that the Judge directed the jury adequately and properly as to the weight of the evidence.¹³

Charge should not be too elaborate or too meagre.—A charge should not be too summary or meagre.¹⁹ As has been observed above, it should sift and analyse the evidence.²⁰ To say to the jury "you have heard the evidence; do you find the accused guilty or not?" is no charge at all.²¹ Nor is it a sufficient compliance with the law to say that the evidence given is "very poor evidence which standing alone amounts to nothing."²² The evidence given by the witnesses should be individually discussed.²³ On the other hand, the charge should not be too elaborate.²⁴ It is sufficient if the main, salient and important points alone are placed before the jury.²⁵ In fact, in a case where

After the Judge has summarised the evidence for the prosecution and the defence, he should tell the jury that though they do not believe the defence, it does not follow that they must believe the prosecution. Giving such a direction at the end of the charge will not amount to misdirection.⁴⁹

Summing up is not rendered unnecessary by reason of counsel having addressed jury. — The sufficiency of a charge to the jury must depend largely upon the special circumstances of each case such as the constitution of the jury, their intelligence and education, the elaboration with which the case has been conducted, the skill of the defence and a variety of other circumstances.⁵⁰ But the Judge will not be relieved of the duty of placing before the jury the important facts of the case simply because the counsel have addressed long arguments to them.⁵¹ It is necessary that the jury should learn from the Judge what are the important points to which their attention should be directed.⁵²

Effect of omission to refer to defence case. — An omission to refer to the case of the defence or the failure to deal with it in an adequate manner will vitiate the trial.⁵³ Where, however, the defence the jury exactly the evidence against each of the accused separately; it is not sufficient if he simply asks the jury to consider the case of each accused separately.² But it is a wrong method of approach to summarise the evidence against each of the accused persons and ask the jury at the end of each summary if the accused has been falsely implicated, thereby putting before them a false issue which is likely to misguide them into thinking that unless they are satisfied that the case is false, they must find the accused guilty.³

The Judge should not in his charge to the jury merely use the word 'accused' leaving the jury in considerable doubt as to which accused he refers; he should make reference to each accused separately.⁴

See also the undermentioned case.⁵

8. Direction to recommend for mercy. — The jury should not be directed by the Judge to recommend the accused to mercy.¹ Where the jury returned a verdict of guilty and, at the same time, recommended the accused to mercy, it was held that the recommendation for mercy did not imply that the jury did not believe the accused to be guilty at all.²

The discussion of legal matters should be introduced in the charge in appropriate places, as and when something occurs in the discussion of the evidence which gives rise to them, and necessitates their application.^{2a}

Elements of offence should be explained. — The Judge should draw the attention of the jury to the offence with which the accused is charged and explain to them clearly and fully the various ingredients which should be proved in order to find the accused guilty of that offence.³ It should not be presumed that the jurors are aware of the necessary elements which constitute an offence or the legal distinction between one offence and another.⁴ Wherever necessary the Judge should charge the jury as to the necessity of strict proof of mens rea, of fraudulent intention, etc.⁵; if the evidence discloses that the accused comes under the exceptions to a particular offence or the general exceptions under chapter IV of the Penal Code, he should unless the jurors are trained men cannot be of much assistance to them to apply the law to the facts; it is always desirable that in charges to the jury the law should be sufficiently explained.⁹ Their attention should also be drawn to the evidence in the case and the method of applying the law to the facts found on such evidence explained.¹⁰ The Judge should not explain the law which does not arise on the facts of the case or the pleadings of the parties. Only so much law as is necessary to find whether the accused is guilty or not of the offence charged should be explained.¹¹ Digressions into questions of first principles¹² or about the proposed amendments of the law¹³ and other extraneous arguments unnecessary to the facts of the case should be avoided.

The explanation of the law should be in the shortest and simplest terms possible without reference to the numbers of the Acts and sections of which the jury have never heard.¹⁴ Similarly, though there is no prohibition in law forbidding a Judge to read to the jury cases from law reports,¹⁵ generally it is very undesirable to refer them to many cases, often conflicting, which would tend to confuse their minds.¹⁶ It is also improper for a Judge to leave a copy of the Penal Code with the jury so that they may find out for themselves under what section the offence against the accused falls.¹⁷

Explanation of the law is not rendered unnecessary by the fact that counsel have addressed the jury. — As has been stated in Note 6, the fact that the prosecuting and defence counsel have explained the law to the jury, does not relieve the Judge of his duty in that respect. The responsibility of laying down the law for the guidance of the jury rests entirely with the Judge and it is immaterial how much or how often jury have been addressed by pleaders on both sides.¹⁸ The reason for this may be stated in the words of a recent pronouncement of the Privy Council¹⁹: "Jurors are apt to be suspicious of the law as propounded by the defence; they look to the Judge for an authoritative statement of it."

When the jurors state that they do not understand the law, it is the duty of the Judge to explain the same to them again.²⁰

The heads of charge should also show how the law was explained to the jury. See section 367 Note 15.

Besides explaining the particular section or sections of the Penal Code or other Acts under which the accused is charged, it is the duty of the Judge to advise and direct the jury on other questions of law and procedure which may arise in the case.²¹

(A) Charge for major offence. — The Judge can direct that it is open to the jury to convict the accused of a minor offence though the charge is in respect of a major offence.²²

Such a presumption may be made, but it is a matter for the jury if they will make it or not.³⁵ See the undermentioned cases³⁶ where the proper mode of charging in such a case is laid down. The jury should be told that the question whether the possession of the article was recent enough to attract the presumption of law under S. 114, Illustration (a) of the Evidence Act, is a matter to be decided by them from all the circumstances of the case.³⁷

(F) Circumstantial evidence. — In cases where there is only circumstantial evidence against the accused, the Judge should direct the jury to find (i) whether the circumstances from which an adverse inference is sought to be drawn against the accused have been proved

The failure to warn the jury of the danger of convicting the accused on the woman's evidence amounts to a non-direction which vitiates the trial.⁴⁸ Where, however, a part of the woman's evidence, which is the crucial part, and which, if believed, establishes the guilt of the accused, is corroborated, the failure to give warning cannot be said to have affected the verdict of the jury and is, therefore, no ground on which the conviction should be set aside.⁴⁹

Where a woman is alleged to be of a bad character, the Judge should point out to the jury that the alleged bad character is relevant only so far as it affects the credit of the woman or supports the defence suggestion that the case is not a true one.⁵⁰

10. Effect of non-observance of this provision — Laying down the law. — It has been held in the undernoted cases¹ that the failure of the Judge to explain properly the law to the jury is not a mere misdirection, but is a failure to comply with an express provision of law vitiating the whole trial; it is a defect which cannot be cured by section 537. In other cases, however, it has been held that such an omission is not a material misdirection and where the offence charged is a simple one (like theft) and where the jury have understood fully the constituent factors of the offence, an omission to explain the law may not of itself justify a reversal of the verdict,² though, where such an omission to explain the law occasions a failure of justice, the verdict will be set aside.³

The cases cited below⁴ show how it is a question depending on the circumstances of each case whether the Judge has failed to lay down the law for the guidance of the jury.

11. Misdirection. — Sub-section (2) of S. 423 provides that the verdict of a jury cannot be altered or reversed "unless . . . such verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge or to a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by him." There is no definition of the word "misdirection" in the Code. Technically, a "misdirection" is an error of law made by a Judge in charging a jury.¹ But the expression as used in the Code includes not only an error in laying down the law by which the jury are to be guided, but also a defect in summing up the evidence.² In *Sundaresa Iyer v. Emperor*³ it was observed that a misdirection "includes also a defect in summing up the evidence or in not summing it up, or summing it up erroneously which may often prejudice the accused more than not summing it up at all. Such error and defect are in all cases an infringement of the law as laid down in S. 297." A mere non-direction is not necessarily a misdirection; those who allege misdirection must show that something wrong was said or something was said which would make wrong that which was left to be understood.⁴

The proper way of viewing a charge by a Judge to the jury has been laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in *Channing Arnold v. Emperor*⁵:

"A charge to a jury must be read as a whole. If there are salient propositions in law in it, these will, of course, be the subject of separate analysis. But in a protracted narrative of fact, the determination of which is ultimately left to the jury, it must needs be that the view of the Judge may not coincide with the views of others who look upon the whole proceedings in black type. It would, however, not be in accordance either with usual or with good practice to treat such cases as cases of misdirection, if, upon the general view taken, the case has been fairly left within the jury's province."^{5a}

It is not enough for the purpose of establishing a misdirection to show that the Judge might have laid much more stress than he has laid on the defects in the prosecution case.⁶

The following may be given as instances of misdirection :

- (1) Instead of asking the jury to find if the case has been legally proved, to tell them that if they are morally convinced, they may find the accused guilty.^{6a}
- (2) Misreading or misquoting the evidence.⁷ It is of the greatest importance that whatever the Judge says to the jury must be true, and must be a correct representation of facts appearing from the evidence.⁸ The Judge should not make suggestions which are absolutely without foundation on the record.⁹
- (3) Grave omissions and vague over-statements.¹⁰ But the omission to mention before the jury some small items of corroborative or discrepant evidence may be comparatively unimportant, particularly in a case where the jury had been addressed by advocates on each side.^{10a}
- (4) Stressing too much on unimportant points.¹¹
- (5) Asking the jury to neglect any portion of the evidence¹² or telling them that "if juries were to throw up a case on account of contradictions and falsehoods, there would be an end to the criminal law of the land."¹³ be illegal. A mere failure on the part of the Judge to point out to the jury all the matters which may be considered by them in evidence, does not necessarily amount to misdirection.⁵ If a case is substantially put to the jury, a mere omission to refer to this or that circumstance or suggestion will not make such omission a misdirection.⁶ The test, as to whether an omission in the summing up of the Judge to the jury amounts to a misdirection or not, is whether the omission, in the opinion of the appellate or revisional Court, is of such importance as to have led to an erroneous verdict by the jury.⁷ A grave omission by the Judge to direct the jury on a vital point cannot be made good by the accused's counsel calling attention to it at the termination of the summing up.⁸

will apply with regard to a non-direction.² What is miscarriage of justice should be judged from the facts and circumstances of each case. In the undermentioned Allahabad cases³ the Court remarked that a "miscarriage of justice through misdirection means that there must be a reasonable ground for apprehending that the misdirection may have affected the jury's verdict." It has not been interpreted to mean that the appellate Court must find before setting aside a verdict that the accused was entitled to an acquittal on the evidence. If this were so, there is no object in ordering a new trial. It means that there must be a reasonable ground for apprehending that, but for the misdirection, the jury may have arrived at a different verdict,⁴ or putting it in another way, "whether in spite of the misdirection the conviction and verdict are not justified in law, as they stand," and if they are justified there is no failure of justice.⁵ Where the appellate Court finds that there is misdirection, it can under S. 423 either acquit the accused setting aside the verdict, or reduce the sentence, or order a new trial with a fresh jury.⁶ In trials by the High Court Sessions, by virtue of

14. Duty of appellate Court in reviewing a charge. — The appellate Court in reviewing the charge to a jury should judge it as a whole. It is sufficient to see whether the tendency of a charge taken as a whole has given a correct or incorrect direction to the mind of the jury.¹ In a Full Bench case² of the Bombay High Court, Beaumont, C. J., observed as follows :

"It is, in my judgment, clearly open to the Court to consider, not so much what effect the misdirection has upon the minds of this Court sitting in place of a jury, but what the effect of the misdirection was or may have been upon the minds of the jury which tried the case; and in so doing we must, I think, assume that the jury was a reasonably competent jury, though we must remember that a jury consists of laymen, and that a misdirection may have more effect upon the minds of laymen than upon the mind of a trained Judge."

17. Effect of a bad charge. — Where a charge is inadequate and insufficient and it does not assist the jury to exercise their function as jurors or place before them clearly the issues to be decided, the whole trial will be bad.¹ But the question in each case would be

18. When Judge can re-charge the jury. — In cases where the jury returns an unintelligible verdict, the Judge instead of asking questions under S. 303 may again sum up the case to them and direct them to give a fresh verdict.¹

But the Judge cannot re-charge the jury and ask them to return a fresh verdict merely because he disagrees with their first verdict.²

Duty of Judge.

298.* (1) In such cases it is the duty of the Judge —

- (a) to decide all questions of law arising in the course of the trial, and especially all questions as to the relevancy of facts which it is proposed to prove, and the admissibility of evidence or the propriety of questions asked by or on behalf of the parties; and, in his discretion, to prevent the production of inadmissible evidence, whether it is or is not objected to by the parties;
- (b) to decide upon the meaning and construction of all documents given in evidence at the trial;

(a) It is proposed to prove a statement made by a person not being a witness in the case, on the ground that circumstances are proved which render evidence of such statement admissible.

It is for the Judge, and not for the jury, to decide whether the existence of those circumstances has been proved.

(b) It is proposed to give secondary evidence of a document the original of which is alleged to have been lost or destroyed.

It is the duty of the Judge to decide whether the original has been lost or destroyed.

(In this case it was observed that the section does not lay down any principles on the question of misdirection but that it does lay down what are the duties of a Judge trying a criminal case with the aid of a jury both in the course of the trial and in the course of the summing up — It is not clear what exactly is meant by this, seeing that a transgression of the duties laid down in the section in summing up would clearly be a misdirection and that sub-s. (2) clearly deals with what a Judge may say in his charge.)]

the general principle that the question what the jury are to receive is for the Judge and what they are to believe is for the jury; in other words, the question whether there is any evidence is for the Judge; whether there is sufficient evidence is for the jury.²

The provisions of this section show that the Judge should evince an interest in the case even from its beginning.³

2. "Judge to decide all questions of law arising in the course of the trial." — The decision on all questions of law arising in the course of the trial is solely for the Judge¹ whose direction thereon is absolute and binding on the jury.² In other words, the jury is to take the law from the Judge.³

The following questions are for the Judge :

- (1) Whether, when an adult woman had consented to sexual intercourse it would be an offence of rape within the meaning of the Penal Code.⁴
- (2) In a case of defamation whether the imputation found to have been made and the harm found to have been the probable or expected result were such as to satisfy the definition of the offence of defamation.⁵
- (3) Whether a particular communication is a privileged one or not.⁶
- (4) Whether any evidence had been given on which the jury could properly find the question for the party on whom the onus of proof lies.⁷
- (5) Whether a person is an accomplice.⁸ The High Court of Calcutta has, however, taken the view that it is the duty of the Judge only to put all the facts before the jury and it is for them to decide whether he is an accomplice whose testimony has to be received with caution.⁹
- (6) Whether there is corroboration.¹⁰

- (7) Whether a witness is capable of testifying as a witness, though, after the Judge has decided in favour of his competency, it is for the jury to decide on the amount of credit to be given to such a witness.¹¹ So the question whether a child¹² or a deaf and dumb person¹³ or one who is unable to take the oath¹⁴ can be examined as a witness should be decided by the Judge as provided by S. 118 of the Evidence Act.

3. Relevancy and admissibility to be decided by the Judge.

— It is the duty of the Judge to decide whether a certain piece of evidence is admissible or relevant.¹ In introducing evidence in a trial with the aid of a jury, the Judge should be very careful to see that there is no miscarriage of justice.² He should decide about the admissibility as and when the question arises and should, if the evidence is inadmissible, shut it out from the jury.³ The moment to decide the question of admissibility is when the evidence is sought to be admitted.⁴ If inadmissible evidence is once let in, any later exhortation to the jury to ignore that will be insufficient (see Note 11 to S. 297). It is always desirable that the jury should be asked to retire from the Court when the question as to the admissibility of a particular piece of evidence is being discussed.⁵ The Judge should decide that a confession is voluntary before admitting it and placing it before the jury,⁶ although such a question is one of fact. The reason is that all facts preliminary to the admissibility of evidence are for the Court.⁷ The Judge is not concerned with the truth of the confession, even if he is satisfied that it is true, but if its voluntary nature is doubted then the Judge should exclude it under the law.⁸ When the Judge has decided on its admissibility, it is for the jury to see whether it is true and can be relied upon, and one test which they will apply is whether it appears to them to have been freely and voluntarily made.⁹ See also the undermentioned cases.¹⁰ Similarly, the Judge has to see if the confession is vitiated by any other circumstance mentioned in Ss. 24, 25, etc., of the Evidence Act.¹¹ He should never leave it to the jury to decide about the admissibility of the confession.¹² Where a Judge admits a first information report into evidence, he should leave the matter entirely free to the jury as to what weight they should attach to it. It is not proper for him to give his reasons for admitting the document. He should merely state that he admits the document in evidence and should lay it before the jury.¹³

The Judge should see that witnesses depose before the jury the facts known to them; it is irregular to read their deposition in the prior trial and ask them if it is true. See also the undermentioned case,¹⁴ where the advantage of the jury hearing the evidence as it is deposed to by the witnesses before them is pointed out.

See also the undermentioned decision¹⁵ as to whether a Judge's admission of evidence amounts to a "decision" within the meaning of Letters Patent, Clause 26. Where certain evidence is wrongly admitted but the course of the trial is not in any way deflected thereby it, would form no ground on which an application under clause 39 of the Letters Patent (Rangoon) can be based.¹⁶

4. "Propriety of questions asked by or on behalf of the parties." — See ss. 148 to 152 of the Evidence Act. The Judge should control the examination-in-chief by the prosecution and allow only legal questions to be put in a legal way.¹ Similarly, it is his duty to control the cross-examination in such a way as to disallow any question which is improper or misleading.²

5. "To prevent the production of inadmissible evidence, whether it is or is not objected to by the parties." — An erroneous omission on the part of the parties to object to the admissibility of a piece of evidence will not render it admissible if otherwise it is not.¹ This section, therefore, provides that the Judge may prevent the production of inadmissible evidence, whether it is or is not objected to by the parties.^{1a}

In Abbas Peada v. Queen-Empress,² their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court observed :

"This is a wise provision of the law, because in many of these cases tried in the Sessions Court by a jury, sometimes the prisoners are not defended at all, and sometimes defended by persons not fully qualified for their work. It is, therefore, the duty of the Judge to see that evidence, which is not admissible in itself, should not be allowed to go in to the prejudice of the accused."

The fact that the accused puts forward some particular ground for holding that certain evidence is not admissible does not relieve the Judge of his duty to look into all the circumstances in order to judge whether the evidence is admissible or not.³ If by accident such inadmissible evidence is let in, the Judge must distinctly tell the jury to guard themselves from being influenced by it.⁴ It is impossible, however, to say, even in such cases, that the minds of the jury were not affected in any way by the admission of inadmissible evidence.⁵ Where such admission has been prejudicial to the accused, the trial will be vitiated.⁶

6. "In his discretion." — It is difficult to understand the object of these words in this section. Granted that a piece of the evidence which is about to be let in, is inadmissible under law, it is impossible to say that the Judge can have a discretion to allow its admission or not. The judicial decisions under this section have in fact held that it is the duty of the Judge to prevent inadmissible evidence going in.

7. Construction of documents — Clause (b). — It is the duty of the Judge to decide upon the meaning and construction of all the documents given in evidence.¹ He will be in error if he leaves the legal construction of a letter or other document to the jury.² See also the undermentioned case.³

8. "To decide upon all matters . . . to enable evidence of particular matters to be given" — Clause (c). — This clause refers only to a finding on a question of fact which it is necessary to prove to make other evidence admissible.¹ Thus, the question whether an accused person was in police custody while making a confession is to be decided by the Judge.² Similarly, the Court has to find the preliminary facts before admitting secondary evidence or statements under S. 32, sub-s.(1) or S. 33 of the Evidence Act.³ But where an approver whose pardon has been revoked is tried for the offence as provided for under S. 339, and where under that section he pleads that he has complied with the conditions of the pardon, the question whether he has forfeited the pardon is one for the jury and not for the Judge.⁴

The Judge should always first decide the preliminary point on which the admissibility of other evidence depends. It is always dangerous to give in advance evidence the admissibility of which depends on what other witnesses may say.⁵

The Judge has ample powers under S. 165 of the Evidence Act to put any question to the witness or to examine any witness.⁶

As to the duty of the Judge to decide about the voluntary character of a confession, see Note 3.

9. When and how far a Judge may give his opinion on question of fact — Sub-section (2). — It is within the competence of a Judge in charging the jury to express his own opinion on facts and make his own suggestions on any points raised. It is for the jury to accept or reject the view of the Judge.¹ In many cases it is not merely permissible but also desirable that the Judge should tell the jury what view he has taken of the facts in order to enable them to consider the facts properly and arrive at their own decision on them.² The jurors have no experience in the matter of sifting evidence and weighing probabilities and consequently stand in need of intelligent guidance from the Judge.³ It is, therefore, necessary that all help should be given to them.⁴ It has been held that a charge which succeeds in avoiding any expression of opinion by Judge is the most colourless and unhelpful one,⁵ and in a recent case it was observed that if a Judge with all his advantages forms a definite and strong opinion that the evidence is not sufficient for a conviction, it is dangerous to leave the matter to the jury without a strong indication of such opinion.⁶

In so expressing his opinion the Judge should remember that the jury are the final judges of fact. The Judge should, in cases where he expresses his opinion, tell the jury in the clearest terms that the responsibility for the decision is theirs and that they have to make up their minds themselves and that they need not rely on any opinion of his on the facts. He must warn them that his opinion is not binding on them.⁷ This warning should not be given in a formal way either at the beginning or at the end of the charge, but should be given at the moment when the Judge has forcibly or otherwise expressed his opinion to the jury,⁸ though it must be remembered that in the course of a lengthy charge the Judge cannot be expected to pause always to assure the jury that the matters of fact are matters for them.⁹ In a decision of the Chief Court of Oudh,¹⁰ Stuart, C. J., observed :

"If the Judge attempts to take the case out of the jury's province by something in the nature of imposing his own view upon the jury, it is a case of misdirection, but if a Judge simply states the opinion, which the law allows him to state, in such a manner that intelligent jurymen should see for themselves that it is only his opinion and nothing else, it is not necessary for him to add as a safeguard a remark that it is only his opinion and that the jury are perfectly at liberty to form their own."

The Judge should not usurp the functions of the jury but should allow them to give a finding and for that purpose should present the case to the jury in a dispassionate and impartial manner.¹¹ He should not sum up in too strong and unqualified terms or give a decided opinion on the case,¹² he should not thrust his own opinion on them so as to dictate to them their verdicts¹³ nor should he be dogmatic in his expression of the opinion¹⁴ or persuade the jury to accept his

If the Judge by his strong expression of opinion takes away the case from the province of the jury, then it will amount to a misdirection.¹⁸ But if on a whole review of the charge it appears that the case is left to the jury to decide, it will not amount to a misdirection.¹⁹ See also Note 11 to S. 297.

Illustrations

(a) A is tried for the murder of B.

It is the duty of the Judge to explain to the jury the distinction between murder and culpable homicide, and to tell them under what view of the facts A ought to be convicted of murder, or of culpable homicide, or to be acquitted.

It is the duty of the jury to decide which view of the facts is true and to return a verdict in accordance with the direction of the Judge, whether that direction is right or wrong, and whether they do or do not agree with it.

(b) The question is whether a person entertained a reasonable belief on a particular point—whether work was done with reasonable skill or due diligence.

Each of these is a question for the jury.

1. Legislative changes.

Changes introduced in 1882 —

- (1) The words “(other than terms of law)” were newly added.
- (2) The words “declared by the Indian Penal Code or by any other law to be questions of fact” were replaced by the words “which according to law are to be deemed questions of fact.”

2. Duties of the Judge and jury respectively. — The different duties of the Judge and the jury are made clear in ss. 297, 298 and in this section. Shortly stated, it is the duty of the Judge to lay down the law, and it is the duty of the jury to decide which view of the facts is true, in accordance with the directions of the Judge on the questions of law.¹ It is not the province of the Judge to decide upon the facts

- (3) the question whether the accused has sufficient maturity of understanding to judge the nature and consequences of his conduct;¹⁸
- (4) the question whether a provocation was so grave and sudden as to be sufficient to bring the case within the exceptions recognised by law;¹⁹
- (5) the question as to whether the accused intended to convey any imputation by his words and whether he believed or had reason to believe that the imputation would produce a particular effect;²⁰
- (6) whether particular fact or facts have been proved.²¹

In murder cases, the question of inference of guilt of the accused to be drawn from the circumstantial evidence appearing against him is a question of fact and not of law and should be left to the jury to decide.²² In such cases, the jury must first decide whether the facts proved exclude the possibility that the deed was done by some other person and if they have doubts they must let the prisoner have the benefit of it.²³

3. Meaning of words. — It is for the jury to decide the meaning and effect of words except the meaning of terms of law. Thus, to ascertain the effect of certain articles in a newspaper alleged to be seditious is for the jury. But the meaning of the word "disaffection" as

1. Retirement to consider verdict. — After the Judge has finished his charge, the jury may retire to the jury-room immediately. The section does not contemplate that the jury should be allowed to disperse and then re-assemble in the jury-room to consider their verdict. Hence, where owing to the indisposition of the foreman of the jury, the jurors were allowed to disperse for a few hours and then they returned to the Court and considered and delivered their verdict, it was held that the procedure was illegal.¹

The jury must not separate until they have considered and delivered their verdict. They should all be in the retiring room together during the whole of the time between the moment of their retirement and the moment when their verdict is taken by the presiding Judge. Hence, where out of nine members who constituted the jury, five first came out of the jury-room and sat in the Court but the remaining four stayed in the jury-room for half an hour more when they came and sat in the Court and the foreman delivered the verdict, it was held that the verdict was vitiated.²

In considering their verdict, the jury ought to be guided, on questions of law, by the directions of the presiding Judge. They are not entitled to consult a commentary on the law during their deliberation.³

When the verdict is attacked on the ground of anything that happened in the jury-room while the jurors were considering their verdict, it is not desirable to receive in evidence the statements of individual jurors in order to impeach the verdict.⁴

2. Prohibition of communication with non-jurors. — The second paragraph of the section prohibits non-jurors from speaking to or holding any communication with the jurors without the leave of the Court before they have delivered their verdict. If it is proved that a non-juror communicated with a member of the jury contrary to this provision, it is sufficient to upset the verdict and it is not necessary to enquire into the nature of the communication held with the juror.¹ Hence, proper precautions must be taken by the Sessions Judge to see that no non-juror holds any communication with the jurors when they have retired to consider their verdict.² But where a juror addressed to a police-officer a casual remark unconnected with the case and the police-officer made no reply, it was held that the provisions of the section were not infringed.³ Similarly, the mere presence of a police-officer in the jury-room does not vitiate the verdict unless it is shown that he spoke to or held any communication with any of the jurors.⁴ But it is undesirable to post a police-officer in the jury room or at any place from where he can hear the deliberations of the jury.⁵

The section does not prohibit the Judge from giving fresh directions to the jury if the latter require such directions for correctly understanding the case. Fresh directions should, however, be given in open Court and not in chambers.⁶ In a sessions trial by the High Court, the Clerk of the Crown can be sent to the jury-room to enquire if the jury require further assistance from the Judge.⁷

The prohibition contained in this section does not in terms apply to stages of the trial before the Judge has finished his charge to the jury. Hence, where during an adjournment of the case before the Judge's charge to the jury was finished, one of the jurors was seen conversing with a non-juror but the fact was not brought to the notice of the Court then and there, the High Court in appeal refused to interfere with the verdict of the jury.⁸ But it is highly undesirable that jurors should have communication with non-jurors upon the subject of a pending trial.⁹ Hence, where before the Judge had summed up his case, one of the jurors, in a room occupied by the clerks of pleaders in answer to questions put to him, said that in his opinion the accused was guilty of the charge, it was held that there should be a fresh trial before a fresh jury.¹⁰ See also the undermentioned cases.¹¹ See also sections 282 and 296 and Notes thereunder.

1. Delivery of verdict. — By "verdict" should be understood the collective opinion of the jury as a body, arrived at after mutual consultation, and ascertained and announced by the foreman.¹ A recommendation made by the jurors in the verdict is, however, not a part of the verdict.^{1a} In cases where an accused person is tried for various offences arising out of a single act or series of acts, the word "verdict" means the entire verdict on all the charges and is not limited to the verdict on a particular charge.²

As said already, the verdict is the opinion of the jury as a body.³ In case of disagreement, the individual opinions of the members of the jury should never be disclosed and the Judge commits an irregularity in recording the individual opinions of the jurors.⁴

The jury must return a verdict on all the charges on which an accused is tried; see S. 303. Where there are several accused persons in a case, the jury must return a verdict as against each.⁵ Where there are several charges, it would be a convenient course to follow to take the verdict of the jury upon each charge separately; this would obviate the difficulty in ascertaining what their verdict is on the various charges.⁶ A verdict that the jury gave the accused the benefit of doubt is not a verdict according to law, although such a verdict is often returned. A verdict of "not guilty" covers every condition from mere hesitating doubt to conviction of innocence.⁷ But it is a very dangerous principle to adopt to regard a verdict of 'not guilty' as not fully establishing the innocence of the person to whom it relates.^{7a} Mere repugnancy in a verdict is not sufficient to quash a conviction based on such verdict.⁸

Where, after delivering the verdict the foreman attempted to add something and the Judge stopped him from doing so, it was held that it was not proper to stop the jury at such a stage because, it may so happen that before the verdict is recorded the foreman of the jury may make some observations in respect of that verdict which may show that the jury have not properly understood the case, in which case it would be necessary to re-charge the jury so as to lay the case properly before them.⁹ See also Notes under ss. 302 and 303.

There is no particular form in which the jury are to deliver their verdict.^{9a} The mere fact that the jury add to their verdict their finding on the facts on which the verdict is based does not vitiate the verdict.^{9b}

As to interpretation of verdicts, see the undermentioned cases.¹⁰

A verdict of the jury after they have been discharged is not legal.¹¹

2. Verdict as to offence not specifically charged. — Sections 237 and 238 lay down the circumstances under which an accused person who is charged with one offence can be convicted of a different offence though not specifically charged with it. The principle of these sections applies also to the verdict of a jury and the jury can return a verdict of guilty in respect of an offence different from that specifically charged against the accused provided the circumstances of the case fall within the purview of these sections. Thus, where on a charge of murder, the jury finds that the accused was deprived of his self-control by grave and sudden provocation, they can return a verdict of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.¹ (See S. 233.) Similarly, on a charge of rape the jury can return a verdict of attempt to commit rape (S. 238).² On a charge of dacoity the jury can return a verdict of theft (S. 238)³ or of abetment of dacoity or robbery (S. 237).⁴ On a charge under S. 149 read with S. 325, Penal Code, it is open to the jury, if it disbelieves the evidence as to the unlawful assembly, to convict the accused under S. 325 alone though there was no separate charge under that section.⁵ See also the undermentioned cases.^{5a}

Where the jury returned a verdict of not guilty on the charges framed, but by the same verdict found the accused guilty of an offence triable with assessors only, and the Judge convicted the accused on such finding, it was held that in the absence of any miscarriage of justice the conviction will not be set aside.⁶

3. Special verdict. — A special verdict is one where the jury merely state certain facts as proved and leave it to the Judge to draw the legal inference from them.¹ Such a verdict is recognised as a proper verdict under the English law.² But there is a conflict of decisions as to whether a special verdict would be a legal verdict under the Code. On the one hand, it has been held by the Bombay High Court, that a special verdict would be a legal verdict under the Code.³ The High Court of Calcutta is inclined to the same view.⁴ On the other hand, the Madras High Court has held that such a verdict is not a legal verdict.⁵

In dealing with special verdicts, a Judge is confined to the facts positively stated in the verdict and cannot himself supply by intendment or implication any defect in the statement.⁶ But if the special verdict is ambiguous or incomplete, it is open to him to question the jury under s. 303 and have their verdict supplemented.⁷

4. Verdict arrived at by casting lots. — As seen in Note 1, the verdict of a jury is the collective opinion of the jury as a body arrived at after mutual consultation and ascertained and announced by the foreman. Hence, a verdict arrived at by casting lots among the jurors would not be legal. But the sworn statement of a juror is not admissible for the purpose of showing that a verdict was arrived at by casting lots.¹

302.* If the jury are not unanimous, the Judge may require them to retire for further consideration. After such a period as the Judge considers reasonable, the jury may deliver their verdict, although they are not unanimous.

1. Scope of the section. — This section empowers the Judge, when the jury are not unanimous in their verdict, to require them to retire for further consideration.¹ Hence, when the jury differ in their opinion, the proper course for the Judge is to direct them under this section to re-consider their verdict.² But the section is intended to be applied as soon as the Judge ascertains that there is a difference of opinion among the jurors and before the verdict is delivered. The section does not apply to cases where the verdict has actually been delivered.³ When directing the jury to re-consider their verdict under this section, it is open to the Judge to give them fresh directions on matters of law.⁴

If the jury are unanimous, their verdict must be received unless it is contrary to law.⁵ Hence, where the verdict is ambiguous, the proper procedure is to question the jury under S. 303, and clear up the matter and not to direct the jury to re-consider the verdict.⁶ But where the verdict is not in accordance with the law⁷ or where from the observations of the foreman of the jury it is clear that the jury have not understood the case,⁸ the Judge can give them fresh directions and ask them to retire for further consideration of the verdict.

charges, the jury should submit a verdict on all the charges.¹ A failure to give a verdict on one of the charges framed does not, however, amount to an acquittal on that charge, and the accused can be ordered to be re-tried again on the charge on which the verdict was silent.²

2. Form of verdict. — The law does not prescribe any special form in which the jury are to return their verdict. They are at liberty to deliver it in any form they like and if that finding is not exhaustive as to the facts in issue which go to make up the charge, it is the duty of the Judge to put such questions as shall elicit a complete finding.¹ In a trial for an offence under S. 408, Penal Code, in respect of a gross sum said to have been misappropriated within a year and composed of more than three items, the proper form in which the verdict should be given is a verdict in respect of an offence under S. 408 and not in respect of each of the items alleged to be misappropriated.²

3. "May ask them such questions as are necessary to ascertain what their verdict is." — It is not open to the Judge to make surmises or conjectures as to what is the verdict of the jury.¹ A Judge is, therefore, empowered to put questions to the jury where they are necessary to ascertain what their verdict is.² It is only in cases where the jury have failed to return a complete verdict on all the charges or heads of charge³ or the verdict returned is ambiguous and not clear⁴ that the Judge may ask questions in order to find out what exactly the verdict is. Thus, where the verdict is not exhaustive as to the facts in issue which go to make up the charge or charges, it is competent to the Judge to ask questions so as to elicit a complete finding.⁵ Similarly, where the jury return a verdict of guilty of an offence under S. 304, Penal Code, the Judge can ask questions for the purpose of finding out under which part of the section they find the accused guilty.⁶ So also, where, in a charge of murder the verdict was "guilty of murder under grave and sudden provocation," the Judge can ask questions under this section for the purpose of ascertaining if the provocation was sufficient to destroy self-control.⁷ Likewise, where, in a charge under S. 326, Penal Code, the jury returned a verdict of "guilty but not voluntarily" the Judge can ask the jury to explain their verdict inasmuch as voluntariness of the act is the gist of the offence under that section.⁸ Where the jury return a verdict of not guilty of culpable homicide, it is the duty of the Sessions Judge to require the jury to find expressly whether or not any minor offence had been committed.⁹ Where in a trial under S. 489B, Penal Code, for uttering forged notes, the jury returns a verdict that the accused uttered the notes, the Judge should ascertain from the jury their opinion as to whether the said notes had been uttered with the knowledge of their being forged.¹⁰ In a trial under S. 366, Penal Code, complied with the direction of law under this section.¹ The provisions of this and the next section imply that the jury are cognizant of the record as made by the Judge, of the questions put to them and answers given by them. It is extremely desirable that such record should be immediately read over to the jury and this should always be done.² The omission to record the verdict of the jury in the terms prescribed by the Code is not however such an irregularity as requires the trial to be quashed and a new one to be ordered.³

5. Re-consideration of the verdict. — Where the jury have delivered a clear and legal verdict, the Judge cannot ask them to re-consider their verdict; if he disagrees with the verdict he should act under S.307.¹ Thus, where in a case of robbery the jury disbelieving the evidence as to the use of force gave a verdict of guilty of theft only, it was held that such a finding was not contrary to law and that the Judge could not direct a reconsideration of the verdict.² Similarly, where the jury returned a verdict of guilty under S.325, Penal Code, although it was not the subject of a separate charge but was entered in a charge coupled with S.149 of that Code, it was held that the verdict was according to law and that the Judge could not direct reconsideration of the verdict.³

But where there is no legal verdict at all⁴ or where the verdict is silent on a particular part of the case, as where the foreman replies that they have not considered a particular part of the case as to which the Judge wanted their opinion,⁵ they can be sent back to reconsider the verdict. In the case of an obviously and admittedly inconsistent verdict, the Judge can make a further charge to the jury instead of referring the case to the High Court under S.307.^{5a} So also, where in a trial for murder the jury at first stated that their unanimous verdict was "guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder" and the Judge, in order to ascertain which degree of the offence the jury intended, asked them questions and from their answers found that they were in doubt as to what they meant and sent them back to reconsider their verdict, it was held that until the jury had intimated under which part of S. 304, Penal Code, their verdict fell, there was no complete verdict capable of being accepted and recorded, that their subsequent answers showed that they had come to no unanimous verdict and that it was the duty of the Judge to send them back for further consideration of their verdict.⁶

304.* When by accident or mistake a wrong verdict is delivered, the jury may, before or immediately after it is recorded, amend the verdict, and it shall stand as ultimately amended.

1. Grounds for amendment.—A verdict can be amended by the jury only where by accident or mistake a wrong verdict is delivered. The section contemplates cases where the verdict delivered is not in accordance with what was really intended to be delivered by the jury. Where there is no mistake or accident in the delivery of the verdict but the verdict is erroneous by reason of the jury having misunderstood the law, it can be corrected only under S. 307 by a reference to the High Court.¹ Similarly, where the jury delivered a verdict of not guilty of murder but guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder and the Judge asked them under what part of S. 304, Penal Code, they found the accused guilty, it was held that the jury could not review their former verdict or amend it unless by mistake or accident a wrong verdict had been delivered.² So also, where the jury delivered a unanimous verdict of not guilty but in answer to some questions by the Judge they said that they had been misled by the notes of their foreman and wanted to reconsider their verdict, it was held that the verdict could not be said to have been delivered by accident or mistake and could not be amended under this section.³

But where there has been no legal verdict at all, as where the jury gave a verdict to the effect "we have no doubt that the accused killed the deceased, we think that the deceased gave no provocation, but we do not think it murder, because the prisoner had no object in killing," the jury could be asked to re-consider their verdict.⁴ It has also been held that the Judge will not be acting wrongly in asking the jury to re-consider their verdict where it is absurd or confused or not clear and definite.⁵

All the evidence on both sides should be concluded before the case can be submitted to the jury. There is no power in the Judge to present a case to the jury subject to any conditions and once they deliver the verdict they cannot re-consider the same except under this section. Thus, where a Judge presented a case to the jury before the defence evidence was heard and they gave a verdict of guilty, and then further defence evidence was taken and the jury submitted a fresh verdict, it was held that the second verdict was a nullity and the judgment thereon was without jurisdiction.⁶

Even after formally delivering the verdict the jury ought to be allowed if they wish to do so, to say immediately after their verdict what they had in their mind in order that the delivery of the verdict may be complete.⁷

2. Time for amendment. — This section provides for an amendment of a wrong verdict but it clearly contemplates that such a verdict can be amended only before or immediately after it is recorded, in other words, before the jurors have left the Court and while they are still under the observance of the presiding Judge.¹ Where the foreman publicly announced the verdict as the unanimous verdict of all the members, in the hearing of all and without any dissent on the part of any of them, and the verdict was recorded and the accused acquitted, the Court refused to set aside the verdict when it was learnt some days after that the verdict was not the unanimous verdict of the jury.²

3. Final verdict to stand. — Where there is some uncertainty in the minds of the jury, the Judge can question them. In such a case, there is no verdict delivered and there could be no verdict formally

305.* (1) When in a case tried before a High Court the jury are unanimous in their opinion, or when as many as six are of one opinion and the Judge agrees with them, the Judge shall give judgment in accordance with such opinion.

Section 305

(2) When in any such case the jury are satisfied that they will not be unanimous, but six of them are of one opinion, the foreman shall so inform the Judge.

(3) If the Judge disagrees with the majority, he shall at once discharge the jury.

(4) If there are not so many as six who agree in opinion, the Judge shall, after the lapse of such time as he thinks reasonable, discharge the jury.

1. Scope of the section. — Under this section, if the jury return a unanimous verdict, the Judge must pass judgment in accordance with it, whether or not he agrees with the opinion of the jury.¹ If the jury are not unanimous but six of them are of one opinion and the Judge agrees with them, such opinion has the same legal force as a unanimous verdict of the jury and the Judge must pass judgment in accordance therewith.² When the Judge disagrees with the opinion of the majority of the jury under sub-s.(3), it is competent to him to express his view as to the innocence or guilt of the accused.³ When the verdict of the jury is a majority verdict of only five to four, it is ineffective either to acquit or convict the accused even if the Judge agrees with the verdict.⁴ In such cases the Judge shall discharge the jury under sub-s.(4).

As to the procedure to be adopted when the Judge discharges the jury under this section, see S. 308.

1. Legislative changes. — The words “unless he proceeds in accordance with the provisions of S. 562” were added by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, XVIII of 1923.

2. Verdict to prevail where Judge does not disagree with it. — In a trial by jury, the position of a Judge in India differs from that of a Judge in England who is merely an instrument for passing a sentence or directing a release, once a verdict is given. In India the Judge must under this section and the next, make up his mind whether he agrees or disagrees with the verdict,¹ and the duty of deciding whether the verdict is to be accepted or not lies upon him alone.² In the former case, he should act under this section, and in the latter case, under the next section.³ This does not mean that whenever he disagrees with the verdict he is bound to make a reference to the High Court. He must be of opinion that it is necessary in the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court.⁴ The Judge may disagree with the verdict and yet not think it necessary to express disagreement, and in such a case this section requires that he shall accept the verdict.⁵

Where the Sessions Judge does not think it necessary to express disagreement, it would be proper for him not to advertise the fact of his disagreement as it would be unnecessary and irrelevant.⁶ He cannot record evidence in the absence of the jury and rely on it for the purpose of determining whether or not he should disagree with the verdict.⁷

The Judge has no power to control the jury and direct them to give a specified verdict. It is for the jury alone to convict or acquit the accused as they think proper⁸ and where the verdict entirely depends on oral evidence, weight should be attached to the verdict of the jury whose function it is to decide the questions of fact.⁹

Where the verdict of the jury is in accordance with the general trend of the charge of the Judge, there is no need for the Judge to give any reasons for accepting the verdict. But where the verdict is not only inconsistent in itself in view of the evidence but is also clearly against the trend of the charge, the Judge owes a duty not only to the appellate Court but also to his own judicial conscience to state his reasons for accepting the verdict.¹⁰

3. Judgment to be according to the verdict. — Where the Judge does not consider it necessary to express disagreement with the verdict of the jury, he is bound to give judgment accordingly. It is not open to him, when he has once accepted the verdict and postponed the case for passing sentence, to reconsider his order and refer the case to the High Court under section 307 of the Code.¹ When a charge triable with the aid of assessors is tried with the aid of the jury, the trial is not, in view of S. 536, illegal and the verdict must be accepted as a legal one. If the Judge disagrees with the verdict he must proceed under section 307, and cannot treat the verdict as the opinion of the assessors and record a finding in opposition to that verdict.²

4. Sentence to be according to law. — The Judge in passing sentence after conviction according to the verdict should give no weight whatever to any doubts he had personally entertained as to the propriety of the verdict of the jury; he cannot mitigate the sentence on that account. Having accepted the verdict he is bound to pass sentence according to law as if he had agreed with the verdict.¹ The sentence again must be suitable to the offence of which the accused is found guilty though the Judge thinks a graver offence has been committed.² When a number of persons are charged under ss. 149 and 302 of the Penal Code and it is not possible to say who struck the fatal blow, it cannot be assumed that there is no case for a capital sentence.³

5. Judgment of acquittal. — The prisoner is entitled to be discharged from custody immediately a judgment of acquittal is pronounced when there is no other charge pending against him. His further detention is illegal and no formal warrant of release from the Judge to the Superintendent of the jail is necessary.¹

- (1) disagrees with the verdict, and
 - (2) is clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court.¹

A Judge in this country is not, like a Judge in an English Court, an instrument for passing a sentence or directing a release once the verdict is given (compare provisions of S. 305, in regard to Sessions trials in High Court); he must make up his mind whether he agrees or disagrees with the verdict, and, in the latter case, he must form an opinion whether in the interests of justice it is necessary to submit the case to the High Court.² To this extent the matter may be said to be in the discretion of the Court. But where the two conditions are satisfied, the section requires that the Judge shall make the reference; the reference is no longer a matter of discretion, but is one of obligation.³ The object of the section is really to provide a safeguard, in trials by jury, against possible miscarriage of justice.⁴

Where the Judge, either does not disagree with the verdict or is not clearly of opinion that it is necessary in the ends of justice to make the reference, he is neither bound⁵ nor entitled⁶ to submit the case to the High Court under this section. Where a reference is made in such cases, the High Court will not act on it or interfere with the verdict on the basis of such reference.⁷

Where no reference is made by the Sessions Judge under this section, the High Court cannot interfere with the verdict of the jury⁸ unless it is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge, or to a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by him, in which case the High Court can interfere on appeal (S. 423 (2)) or in revision.⁹ Nor can the High Court direct the Judge to make a reference.¹⁰

Where the jury have returned a clear and unambiguous verdict, it is not open to the Judge to re-charge the jury and ask them to return a fresh verdict merely because he disagrees with their verdict. The Judge can only refer the case to the High Court under this section, if he thinks fit to do so.¹¹

As to applicability of the section to cases erroneously tried by jury, see Note 15.

2. Who can refer. — The words “in any such case” refer to cases tried before a Court of Session and consequently the word “Judge” must mean the Sessions Judge.

A reference under this section is not invalid in consequence of its having been made by a Judge who held the trial, but who, at the time of the reference had ceased to be a Judge.¹

It has been held by the Judicial Commissioner’s Court of Sind that the Judicial Commissioner’s Court of Sind is a High Court and not a Court of Session for the purposes of this section and that consequently, a Judge of that Court holding a sessions trial by jury has no power to make a reference under this section.²

Under the Code as it stood before 1923, there were certain provisions such as S. 451, under which a District Magistrate was empowered to make a reference under this section to the High Court.³ These have now been repealed.

3. “Disagrees with the verdict.” — As has been seen in Note 1, the Judge cannot make a reference under this section unless he disagrees with the verdict. Under the Code of 1882 the disagreement was required to be so complete that it was necessary in the ends of justice to make a reference. The words “so completely that” have been omitted in the present Code, with the result that the fact that the Judge disagrees with the verdict need not always involve the proposition that it would be in the ends of justice to make a reference: the words “ends of justice” mean something more than mere disagreement, and the necessity of submitting the case depends upon the gravity of the offence, and its prevalence and other considerations of a similar nature.¹ A contrary view, namely that unless the disagreement is such as to involve the necessity of making, in the ends of justice, a reference under this section, it is not a disagreement at all, has however been taken in the undermentioned cases.^{1a} It is submitted that this view is not correct.

The word "disagrees" in this section means that the Judge thinks it necessary to express disagreement. In other words, the section requires that the Judge must not only disagree, but must think it necessary to express disagreement, for, otherwise, he would be bound to give judgment according to the verdict under S. 306.² Cases can be conceived of in which the Judge thinks it necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case but yet does not think it necessary to express disagreement with the verdict. Thus, where the jury bring in a verdict of guilty but the Judge feels satisfied of the innocence of the accused, it may be said that the ends of justice require a reference to be made. But still, the Judge may think that the High Court is not likely to interfere as the verdict is not perverse and may therefore refrain from expressing disagreement with the verdict of the jury and proceed under S. 306.³ Thus, the mere fact that the ends of justice may, in the opinion of the Judge, require a reference to be made, does not mean that the Judge should think it necessary to express disagreement with the verdict of the jury. But at the same time, it may be taken that if the ends of justice do not require a reference to be made, the Judge will not think it necessary to express disagreement with the verdict. See also the case cited below.⁴

The disagreement contemplated by the section is with the verdict and not merely with the grounds on which the verdict was given: thus, where the jury gave a verdict of acquittal and the Judge was of the opinion that the jury ought to have given the benefit of doubt to the accused rather than have believed the defence version, it was held that this did not amount to disagreement with the verdict.⁵ But where the jury return a verdict of guilty and the Judge is doubtful about the absolute innocence of the accused but is distinctly of opinion that the benefit of doubt should be given to the accused, there is sufficient disagreement so as to entitle him to make a reference.⁶

Where the Judge directs the jury that if they find the accused not guilty of the offence charged, they might find him guilty of a lesser offence, and the jury give a verdict of not guilty but the Judge is of opinion that the accused is guilty of the minor offence, it has been held that it is sufficient disagreement within the meaning of this section.⁷

Where, however, on a charge of an offence under S. 326, read with S. 149, Penal Code, the jury acquitted the accused on the charge of rioting, and the Judge agreed with such verdict, it was held that the Judge could not say that he disagreed with the verdict so far as an offence under S. 326 alone was concerned, and make a reference under this section.⁸

Where once the verdict is accepted, the Judge cannot at the time of passing the sentence, change his mind and disagree with the verdict, so as to make a submission under this section.⁹

4. "Is clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice."—There is a difference of opinion on the question whether the power of the Judge to make a submission under this section is limited to cases where he is satisfied that the verdict is perverse or manifestly wrong or is unreasonable. According to the High Courts of Lahore¹ and Patna,^{1a} the power is not so limited but it is sufficient if he be clearly of opinion that a reference is necessary for the ends of justice. A Full Bench of the High Court of Madras has, on the other hand, held that in order to enable the Judge to make a submission, he should come to the conclusion that the verdict is one which is unreasonable.² A Full Bench decision of the Nagpur High Court also contains an opinion that the condition as to the Judge being clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case would be satisfied only if in the opinion of the Judge, the jury had arrived at a perverse verdict.^{2a} The decisions of the Calcutta High Court are conflicting.^{2b} See also Note 8. the verdict is perverse or unreasonable or is not supported by evidence, it should ordinarily be in the ends of justice to make a submission. In such cases the Judge should always make a reference.³ It may also be stated as a rule of guidance that where a verdict cannot be said to be unwarranted by the evidence in the case⁴ or is one which reasonable men might find on the evidence placed before them,⁵ no reference should be made. But to say that the power is limited to cases where the verdict is considered perverse or unreasonable is to import conditions which are not found in the section and is not correct.

In view of the provisions of this section it is necessary that the trial Judge should for himself appreciate the evidence and form his own opinion on the case so as to see whether it is necessary for the ends of justice to make a reference against the verdict of the jury.⁶

Where the same body of persons sit as jurors as well as assessors in a case (see S.269, sub-s.(3)), the Judge ought not to use their reasons given for their opinions delivered as assessors as material for saying that their verdict as jury is perverse.⁷

Where the jury consider the accused guilty of offence X while the Judge considers him guilty of offence Y but is punishable with the same amount of punishment as X, the question whether the accused should be convicted of the one or the other offence is in the nature of an academic one and hardly worth a reference under this section.⁸

whole case against the particular accused and not merely of those charges on which he disagrees,¹ since, by this limited reference the High Court will be precluded from considering the entire evidence on the record against such accused.² In other words, the Judge should not divide the verdict of the jury, accept a part and make a submission with reference to the other part.³ See also Note 15.

6. "In respect of such accused person." — This section does not intend that when there are several accused and the Sessions Judge is not prepared to accept the verdict of the jury against all but only against some, he should refer the whole case to the High Court. It contemplates only a reference in the case of those persons in respect of whom the Judge declines to accept the verdict. In respect of any other accused against whom the Judge agrees with the verdict of the jury, the Judge should convict and sentence or acquit him as the case may be.¹

7. Grounds of opinion to be recorded. — The Judge referring a case under this section must first of all record his opinion. If he does not record it, it is not possible for the High Court to pass orders on the reference.¹ The letter of reference should further state the case, the verdict of the jury and concisely the ground upon which the Judge differs from the jury and considers it necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court.² It should, in other words, be complete in itself and the High Court should not be required to refer to the order sheet in order to gather the particulars the section requires to supply.³ It was observed in the undermentioned case⁴ that the referring order should be in the nature of a judgment which would give the High Court a proper summary of the evidence and reasons of the learned Judge for holding it to be credible or otherwise. Merely repeating remarks made in the charge to the jury and adding such vague remarks as "for these and other reasons I submit the case for the orders of the High Court" are not sufficient.⁵ The Judge should state exactly what material portion of the evidence he believes to be true and his reasons for arriving at his conclusions.⁶ The reference should, further, be based upon the evidence placed before the jury and not on case not so presented to them. The High Court should not be asked to consider the case on matters not placed before the jury.⁷

Where a reference shows that the Judge's opinion is that the verdict is perverse, but this is not clearly stated, the High Court will presume that the reference has been made on the ground that the verdict is perverse.⁸

It is unfair for the Judge to make reflections on the conduct of the jurors which are not supported by the record.⁹

8. Reference against verdict of acquittal.—Where the Judge disagrees with a verdict of acquittal he should in his letter of reference state the offence which he considers to have been committed by the accused.¹ But a mere omission to do so will not entail a rejection of the reference.² It has been held that where the verdict of the jury is one of acquittal there is a much greater onus on the Judge to satisfy the High Court as to the necessity of interference than in cases of a verdict of guilty³ and that unless the verdict is manifestly wrong or perverse or unreasonable the Judge is not entitled to submit the case to the High Court in such cases.⁴ In some cases it has been held that a submission on a pure question of fact is not permissible where the verdict is one of acquittal.⁵ It is apprehended that this also means that unless the verdict is unreasonable or perverse (in which case it will be bad in *law*⁶) the case cannot be submitted to the High Court. The question raised forms part of the larger question discussed in Note 4 viz., whether the power of reference under this section is limited to cases where the verdict is perverse or unreasonable and as there does not seem to be any special rule of law applicable to cases of acquittal alone in this respect, it is submitted that the considerations set forth in the above Note will also apply to such cases if the matter is regarded as one of law, although special considerations may arise in the case of acquittals, as a matter of practice.⁷

9. Charge under section 310. — Prior to the amendment of the section in 1923, it was held that in cases of reference under this section, there was no conviction or acquittal in the Sessions Court and that it was for the High Court to convict or acquit the accused and that, therefore, it was not until after conviction by the High Court that the accused could be asked to plead to prior conviction.¹ The present section as amended makes provision for proceeding under S. 310 where there is a charge under that section, even before the decision of the High Court.

10. "Shall not record judgment of acquittal or of conviction." — It was held under the Code of 1861, in which there was no section corresponding to this, that the Sessions Judge was bound to pass judgment even though he disagreed with the jury.¹ It is now clear that no judgment should be recorded where the Judge refers the matter to the High Court.

Section 307

10a. Bail pending reference to High Court. — Where the jury returns a unanimous verdict of guilty on a serious charge like that of murder, but the Judge disagreeing with the verdict thinks it proper to refer the case to the High Court, it is desirable that the accused is kept in custody pending the reference and not released on bail.¹

11. Powers of the High Court under this section. — Sub-section (3) specifies the powers which the High Court may exercise where a reference is made to it under this section. The High Court may exercise any of the powers which it may exercise on an appeal, and subject thereto, it shall, after considering the entire evidence and after giving due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the jury, acquit or convict the accused of any offence of which the jury could have convicted him upon the charge framed and placed before it.

The words "subject thereto" were introduced into the section only in the year 1896. Before the said introduction, it had been held that the powers of the High Court on a reference were not in any way affected or curtailed by S. 418 or S. 423 of the Code which limits the powers of the appellate Court, in cases tried by jury, to interference on matters of law, and that, therefore, the High Court could go into questions of fact as well as questions of law.¹ It has been held that the introduction of the words "subject thereto" is not inconsistent with the said view, the object of such introduction being to clothe the High Court, when acting under this section, with all the powers, as regards procedure, of a Court of appeal if for good reasons it desires to exercise any of them.²

There is, however, a difference of opinions as to the extent of the powers of the High Court to interfere on matters of fact. One view is —

- (1) that the guiding principle in exercising this power should be that the decision of the tribunal appointed by law to determine the guilt or innocence of the accused should not be touched except under strong circumstances;³
- (2) that where two views are possible on the evidence and the jury has taken one of such views, the High Court has no power to interfere even though it may itself take a contrary view;⁴
- (3) that, therefore, the High Court cannot interfere unless the verdict is —

- (1) that the sanctity of a verdict really rests on the absence of the disagreement of the Judge, and that if that disagreement is expressed (as it must be where a reference is made under this section), the special sanctity of the verdict disappears and it has no greater force than the decision of any other tribunal of fact;¹⁰
- (2) that the whole case is opened up on a reference,¹¹ that the functions of both the Judge and the jury are cast upon the High Court,¹² and that the High Court is entitled to act up to its own view of the case, though in forming its view it should give due weight to the opinions of the Judge and the jury;¹³

(3) that, therefore, where the verdict appears to the High Court to be one which ought not to be upheld, it is entitled to interfere even though the verdict is neither unreasonable nor perverse.¹⁴ It has, however, been held that in cases where there has been a verdict of not guilty, it is the practice not to reverse the verdict unless it is perverse or manifestly wrong.¹⁵ A Full Bench of the High Court of Nagpur has held that even though the whole case is open on a reference under the section, the High Court ought not to interfere with the verdict of the jury unless the High Court considers such verdict to be wrong beyond any reasonable doubt.^{15a}

It is submitted that the first view is not correct. There is nothing in the section to limit the power of the High Court to interfere in cases where the verdict is perverse or unreasonable. Where the High Court considers on the evidence that the verdict ought not to be upheld, it will in fact amount to a miscarriage of justice if the verdict is to be upheld by reason of a sort of conventional respect for the jury. Further, it may be noted that the section speaks of the opinion of the jury, and not of the verdict.¹⁶ The principle of the sanctity of the verdict need not be applied with strictness to the opinion of the jury.

It is, however, necessary before the High Court can interfere under this section that it should come to the conclusion on the evidence that the decision of the jury is wrong. Where the decision is correct or cannot be said to be wrong, there is no room for any interference.¹⁷

It has been held by the High Court of Bombay in the undermentioned case¹⁰ that the powers of the High Court under this section are controlled by S. 537 and that consequently where there is no failure of justice, the High Court cannot interfere.

12. Reference in case falling under S. 449. — See Section 449 Note 7.

13. "After giving due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the jury."— In arriving at a conclusion, the High Court is required to give due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the jury. There is a difference of opinion as to the relative weight to be given to such opinions, one view being that the opinion of the jury must stand unless the evidence and opinion of the Judge show clearly that it is wrong and that in the interests of justice it ought to be reversed;¹ a second view being that more weight should be given to the opinion of the Sessions Judge inasmuch as, in addition to the fact that he has, equally with the jury, heard the witnesses, he has been trained to appreciate evidence and gives reasons for his opinion;² a third view is that the opinion of the one is not entitled to more weight than that of the other and that they are both entitled to equal weight.³ In the undermentioned case⁴ it was held that the measure of the relative weight to be attached to the opinions cannot be crystallized into an inflexible formula, but depends upon the facts of each case, though the trend of opinion is to prefer the opinion of the jurors.

There is also a difference of opinions on the question whether the opinion of the jury includes the reasons for the verdict, or whether it means the verdict only. On the one hand, it has been held that the Judge has no power to ask the jury, under S. 303, the reasons for their verdict, and that consequently the opinion of the jury does not include the reasons, but only the verdict.⁵ On the other hand, it has been held that, for the purpose of satisfying himself as to the advisability of making a reference under this section, the Judge is entitled to question the jury as to their reasons for their verdict, and that the reasons so given are included in the word "opinion" and can be considered by the High Court.⁶ It has also been held that the word 'opinions' in this section is wider than the word 'verdict' in S. 423, sub-s.(2) and includes not only the final decision of the majority, but also the opinion of the minority.⁷ The opinion of the Sessions Judge means the opinion expressed in the reference or at the hearing.⁸ It does not include his speculations as to what external considerations, such as the conduct of the jury, might have affected the verdict of the jury.⁹

14. Power of High Court to order re-trial or order additional evidence to be taken. — The High Court can, in a reference under this section, not only determine the facts itself but may also order a re-trial.¹ It may also call for additional evidence under S. 428 of the Code.²

The jurisdiction exercised in such cases is not, however, original criminal jurisdiction³ although it is not also that of a Court of appeal.⁴

15. Verdict of jury in cases not triable by jury — Applicability of this section. — Where by mistake an offence which is triable with the aid of assessors is tried by jury, the Judge, when he discovers the mistake, may treat the trial as legal and refer the case to the High Court under this section if he disagrees with the verdict of the jury.¹ Where a charge is triable with the aid of the jury as assessors (S. 269, sub-s.(3)), but is tried by the jury and a verdict is given, the procedure, though irregular, is legal and a reference is competent under this section.²

Sub-section (2) of this section which forbids recording of judgment of acquittal or of conviction, applies only to charges which are tried by jury and not to charges which are tried with the aid of assessors. Thus, where a case is triable with regard to some of the charges by a jury and with regard to others with the jury as assessors under S. 269, sub-s.(3), the mere fact that a reference is made with regard to the charges triable by jury does not absolve the Court from proceeding under S. 309 to judgment in respect of the other charges. The whole case should not be submitted.³ It has been held that in such a case the High Court can on the reference set aside the sentence passed by the Judge with regard to the offence triable with the aid of assessors (though not appealed against).⁴

See also Note 13 to section 309.

16. Acquit or convict of any offence, etc. — It has been seen in Note 11 that the whole case is open to the High Court and it can come to its own conclusion therein. In hearing a reference under this section the High Court can acquit the accused or convict him of any offence of which the jury could have convicted the accused on the charges framed and placed before them.¹ In cases falling within ss. 237 and 238, the accused can be convicted of an offence different from the one for which he was charged. So the High Court can, on hearing a reference under this section, convict the accused of an offence different from the one he was charged with, within the limits imposed by those two sections.^{1a} Thus, in a case under S. 302 of the Penal Code the High Court can convict the accused of an offence under S. 304A of that Code, even though the accused was not specifically charged under that section since such a case comes under ss. 237 and 238 of this Code.² On a case submitted under this section the High Court can acquit the accused if it so thinks fit on facts notwithstanding that the jury have found the prisoner guilty³ and it can convict the accused notwithstanding that the jury have found the prisoner not guilty.⁴

17. Procedure at the hearing of reference. — The High Court under this section on a reference against the verdict of acquittal must deal with the case as an appeal by the prosecution.¹ In such a case the Crown is the party who asks for a conviction and the prosecutor must begin the case and satisfy the High Court that there is a case calling upon the prisoner for an answer.²

18. Notice of reference. — This section is silent as to whether any notice of reference to the accused is necessary. It is, however, fair to him that such notice should be given and that he should have

19. Difference between Judges hearing reference — Procedure. — Where a reference is heard by two Judges and they differ in their opinions, the decision is not to be governed by the opinion of the senior Judge; the matter must be referred to a third Judge in the manner required by section 429.¹

20. Appeal. — Inasmuch as no judgment of acquittal or of conviction is to be recorded where a reference is made under this section, there can be no appeal as from a Sessions Judge to the High Court.¹ But where no reference is made, it is clear that the judgment that must follow the verdict will be appealable under ss. 417² and 418.

A judgment passed by the High Court on a reference under this section is itself not open to appeal to the High Court.³

All such questions and the answers to them shall be recorded.

1. Scope of the section. — The Code provides for two modes of trial before the Sessions Court —

- (1) trial by jury, and
- (2) trial with the aid of assessors.

Sections 297 to 307 provide for the procedure to be followed at the conclusion of a trial by jury after the arguments on either side have been completed. This section provides for the procedure to be followed at the conclusion of a trial with the aid of assessors. The following are some of the important points of distinction between the verdict of a jury and the opinions of assessors¹:

- (1) The verdict of a jury is conclusive, though the Judge disagrees with it, unless he considers it fit to submit the case to the High Court

- under s. 307. But in a trial with the aid of assessors, the Judge is not bound to pronounce judgment in accordance with the opinions of the assessors, although in delivering his judgment he is bound to take into consideration the opinions of the assessors. See Note 13.
- (2) The jury form a body and their verdict is the verdict of the body. But in the case of a trial with the aid of assessors, the assessors do not form a body; each acts and expresses his opinion individually. See Note 5.
- (3) In the case of a trial by jury the Judge's charge to the jury is an essential part of the procedure; while in a trial with the aid of assessors, it is left to the discretion of the Judge whether or not to sum up the evidence to them. See Note 2.
- (4) The jury are entitled to retire for mutual consultation before delivering their verdict; the assessors are not so entitled, although the Judge may permit such consultation. See Note 4.

2. Summing up of evidence by Judge to assessors. — While it is obligatory on the Judge to charge the jury, summing up the evidence and laying down the law by which they are to be guided (s. 297), this section confers a discretion on the Court to sum up the evidence for the prosecution and the defence.¹ This provision was first introduced into the section in the Code of 1882,² but even prior to it, it was held that the Court had a discretion to sum up the evidence for the benefit of the assessors.³ The object of the provision is to enable the Sessions Judge in long or intricate cases to place the evidence in an intelligible form before the assessors so as to assist them in arriving at a reasonable conclusion; the provision should be resorted to only in such cases.⁴ In summing up the evidence, the Judge should not obtrude on the assessors his own opinion on the value of the evidence.⁵ When at the same trial, an accused is tried by jury for some offences and by the Court with the aid of the jurors as assessors for other offences (s. 269, sub-s.(3)), the Judge in summing up the evidence should explain to the jurors the double capacity in which they are acting.⁶ As to the recording of the summing up, see the undermentioned case.⁷

3. Delivery of opinions of assessors. — In a trial by a Sessions Court with the aid of assessors, the Judge is not bound to deliver judgment in conformity with the opinions of assessors (see Note 13); but he is bound to take the opinions of the assessors before convicting or acquitting the accused.¹ Even where the accused admits his guilt (after the prosecution evidence, in a case where originally he pleaded not guilty), he cannot be convicted without taking such opinions.² The power (under S. 289) to record a finding of not guilty and acquit the accused at the conclusion of the case for the prosecution without calling on the accused to enter on his defence and without recording the opinions of the assessors, is confined to cases where there is no evidence in support of the prosecution. Where such is not the case the Judge is bound to record the opinions of the assessors under this section though he considers the evidence for the prosecution to be unreliable.³ The omission to ask for and record opinions is not a mere irregularity curable under S. 537.⁴ But where a prosecution is withdrawn under section 494, the accused is entitled to be acquitted irrespective of the opinions of the assessors and such opinions need not be recorded before he is acquitted.⁵

4. Retirement of assessors to consider their opinions. — This section makes no provision as to the right of the assessors to retire to consider their opinions (compare S. 300 in the case of jurors). The matter is left to the discretion of the Judge. Though he may, in his discretion, allow the assessors to consult each other before giving their opinions,¹ he is not bound to do so as he is entitled to have

5. Each assessor to be asked his opinion. — In a trial by jury, the jury form a body and the verdict is that of the body. But in a trial by the Court with the aid of assessors, the assessors do not form a body; but each assessor acts and expresses his opinion individually.¹ Hence, it is the duty of the Judge to ask each assessor individually his opinion and record it separately.² Where the opinions of some of the assessors are not asked for and recorded, the trial is vitiated by an illegality.³ But where the opinions of all the assessors are asked for, the fact that, on its being found that all of them are of the same opinion, such opinion is recorded in a joint statement, instead of separately, is only an irregularity curable by section 537.⁴

6. Assessors' opinions to be stated orally. — The section requires the opinions of the assessors to be stated orally. The submission of written opinions by the assessors is not contemplated by the section.¹ But the giving of opinions in writing is only an irregularity which will not vitiate the proceedings unless it has occasioned a failure of justice.²

7. Opinion to be given on all the charges. — A distinct opinion on each charge on which the accused has been tried must be taken and recorded.¹ It has been held by the Oudh Chief Court that a failure to

8. Conviction for offence different from that on which opinions of assessors were taken. — After the opinions of the assessors have been taken, it is not open to the Court to add to or alter the charge (S. 227.) But if a case falls within the purview of S. 237 or S. 238, the accused can be convicted of an offence different from that on which the opinions of the assessors were taken.¹ Thus, where the accused is charged under S. 302, Penal Code (murder) and the opinions of the assessors are taken on such charge, it is open to the Sessions Judge (in a proper case) under S. 237 to convict the accused under S. 201 of the Penal Code (causing disappearance of evidence of the offence by removing the dead body), though the opinions of the assessors are not taken on such offence.² Similarly, (in a proper case) an accused can be convicted under S. 403, Penal Code (criminal misappropriation), though the charge against him was under S. 395, Penal Code (dacoity), and the opinions of the assessors were taken only on such charge.³

10. Questioning assessors. — This section empowers the Judge to ask the assessors such questions as are necessary to ascertain what their opinions are. Thus, if there is anything obscure in the opinions expressed by the assessors, the Judge can clear up the obscurity by questioning the assessors.¹ Sometimes it may become the duty of the Judge to assist the assessors by putting them specific questions concerning the facts of the case. Thus, when there is a mixed question of fact and law to be decided, as for instance, a question of private defence, it may be necessary to ask the assessors specific questions on the facts on which the law will turn.² But the Judge should allow the assessors, in the first instance, to give their opinions in their own way and when they have completed their statements, it would be open to him to question them to elucidate their opinions.³ In questioning the assessors they should first be asked to give their opinions as to what happened and then, if necessary, to give a further opinion on such matters as intention, knowledge, etc.⁴

11. Reasons for opinions, if may be asked. — There is a conflict of decisions as to whether the assessors may be asked to give reasons for their opinions. In a decision of the Madras High Court, it has been held that, as in the case of jurors, so also in the case of assessors, the Judge ought not to ask the assessors to give reasons for their opinions beyond what is necessary to decide whether they have understood the case.¹ On the other hand, it has been held by the Bombay High Court that the assessors can and should be asked to give reasons for their opinions.² A similar view was held by the Calcutta High Court in certain old decisions.³ The Chief Courts of the Punjab and Lower Burma were also inclined to the same view.⁴ This view proceeds on the ground that in the case of a jury their verdict is a simple verdict of guilty or not guilty, while in the case of assessors, they merely give an opinion and its weight depends solely on the reason and sense on which it is supported.⁵

In any view it is not open to the Judge to cross-examine the assessors; they must be allowed to give their independent opinions on the case.⁶ See also Note 13.

12. "The Judge shall then give judgment." — The section requires that on taking the opinions of the assessors, the Judge should proceed to deliver his judgment.¹ He has no power, after the opinions of the assessors have been recorded, to cancel the trial and hold a fresh trial.² Nor can he, at such stage, take fresh evidence³ or make a local inspection⁴ and base his judgment on such evidence or inspection. The judgment must conform to the provisions of S. 307 of the Code, and must accordingly contain the reasons for the decision of the Judge. It is no compliance with that section if the Judge merely states that he agrees with the opinions of the assessors.⁵ In delivering his judgment, though the Judge is not bound to conform to the opinions of the assessors, he is entitled to take into consideration such opinions in arriving at his conclusions : see Note 13. But the Judge is not entitled to refer in his judgment to the opinion of the committing Magistrate.⁶

opinions^{1a} and although there is no express provision in the Code making it obligatory on the Judge to discuss in his judgment the opinions of the assessors, still, as a matter of practice, it is desirable that he should do so.²

The sub-section applies only to cases which are actually tried with the aid of assessors. Where a case which is so triable is, as a matter of fact, tried by jury, the Judge cannot treat the verdict of the jury as the opinions of assessors and pronounce judgment contrary to the verdict; but he must, if he disagrees with it, proceed under S. 307.³

The opinions of the assessors which a Judge can take into account in pronouncing his judgment are opinions based on the evidence in the case. The Judge cannot refer in his judgment to the opinion of an assessor based on the latter's personal knowledge.⁴

part of a case a Judge is transferred or goes on leave, his successor must hear the case de novo from the beginning and not only from the point at which the previous Judge left the case.¹ Even where the previous Judge is transferred or goes on leave after the opinions of the assessors have been recorded, the successor cannot pronounce judgment without hearing the case de novo from the beginning and taking the opinions of the assessors over again.² (Compare S. 350 in the case of Magistrates.)

15. Sentence. — If the accused is convicted, the Court has no discretion, unless it decides to proceed under S. 562, to refuse to pass sentence according to law;¹ and, if the accused is found guilty on several charges, the Court is bound to pass sentence on each of the charges.²

The responsibility for the sentence rests with the Judge alone and where he differs from the assessors as regards conviction, he should not let their opinion weigh with him regarding the sentence. Hence, the fact that the assessors gave their opinions that the accused was not guilty is no reason for passing a lesser sentence.³

Procedure in case of previous conviction.

310. In the case of a trial by jury or with the aid of assessors, where the accused is charged with an offence, committed after a previous conviction for any offence, the procedure laid down in sections 271, 286, 305, 306 and 309 shall be modified as follows :

(a) The part of the charge stating the previous conviction shall not be read out in Court, nor shall the accused be asked whether he has been previously convicted as alleged in the charge unless and until he has either pleaded guilty to, or been convicted of, the subsequent offence ;

1. Legislative changes. — This section has been substituted for the old section by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, XVIII of 1923.

Under the section as it stood before the amendment the accused could be asked about his previous conviction only if he pleaded guilty to or was convicted of the subsequent offence. The Court could not ask him about it where the jury had given a verdict and the Court without convicting him, made a reference to the High Court under s. 307.¹ This disability has now been removed.

2. Scope and object of the section.—This provision of law has been taken from the English Statute law, 6 & 7 William IV, Chap. 3.¹ It is based on the principle that a prisoner on his trial ought not to be prejudiced by a statement of a previous conviction suffered by him.² The section is imperative.³ It is most essential that the procedure prescribed by it should be conducted with precision, regularity and close adherence to the rules laid down in this section.⁴ This section indicates the importance of the complete exclusion of the knowledge of previous conviction when weighing the evidence as to the truth or otherwise of the main charge.⁵

It has been held in the undermentioned case⁶ that the fact that an accused is a registered member of a criminal tribe under the Criminal Tribes Act, VI of 1924,—a fact from which bad character can be inferred—should not, on the analogy of this section, be disclosed to the jury until after their verdict, lest their minds should be prejudiced.

The section is applicable to trials before the Court of Session only and does not apply to trials before Magistrate.⁷ As to trials before Magistrates, see section 255A.

3. When previous conviction should be referred to.—The accused should not be asked about his previous conviction nor his plea should be taken thereto until after —

- (1) his conviction for the subsequent offence,¹ or
- (2) the jury have delivered their verdict,^{1a} or the opinions of the

The record should invariably show that no reference to the previous conviction was made until one or the other of the conditions mentioned in the section has happened.³

Where a charge of previous conviction is tried, the accused cannot be examined about his previous conviction in such trial, unless there is on the record some legally admissible evidence to show the fact of the previous conviction;⁴ see section 342.

Section 311

previous conviction is relevant under the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872.

This section was added as the last paragraph of S. 310 of the Code of 1882 by Act III of 1891 and took the place of S. 311* of the Code of 1882, which was repealed by Act XII of 1891.

1. Scope. — The guilt of a person accused of an offence is to be established by proof of the facts and not by proof of his character. A previous conviction may be proved to show the offender's character. But such evidence might create a prejudice but not lead a step towards substantiation of guilt. Hence, S. 310 delays the proof of such previous conviction to a stage after the conviction, or the delivery of a verdict by the jury, or the recording of opinions of assessors, as the case may be. However, if the fact of the previous conviction is relevant under the provisions of the Evidence Act, the present section provides that the evidence of the same need not be delayed but may be given at the trial of the subsequent offence, notwithstanding S. 310.

The relevancy of a previous conviction is to be determined by a reference to the sections of the Evidence Act. Such evidence is inadmissible save in a few, well-defined and exceptional circumstances.¹ Under S. 54, Evidence Act, a previous conviction is relevant as evidence of bad character. But a previous conviction is not admissible in evidence against the accused unless evidence of good character be given by him, in which case the fact that the accused has been previously convicted of an offence is admissible as evidence of bad character. A previous conviction may also be relevant under S. 43 (see illustrations (e) and (f)) and S. 8, Evidence Act, as showing motive. It is also relevant under S. 14, Evidence Act, when the existence of any state of mind such as intention, knowledge, etc., or existence of any state of body or bodily feeling is in issue or relevant (see illustration (b)).^{1a} For instance, where a person was charged with the offence of belonging to a gang of persons associated for purpose of habitually committing dacoity, it was held that the proof of a previous conviction was

3. "Liable to serve." — The mere fact that a person's name is on the list does not render him liable to serve as an assessor unless he is liable under this section. Thus, a man may reside during the year in more than one district and his name might be entered in the jurors' or assessors' list in each of such districts. But he would be subject to serve as a juror or assessor only if he is residing in the district in which the trial is held. A juror or assessor, who is absent for a long time from his ordinary place of residence, will be regarded as non-resident in that place and will be exempt from liability to serve as a juror or assessor under this section.¹

4. Within the district. — Where the Sessions Judge of Kanara asked the High Court for special permission to hold his Court at Sirsi instead of at Karwar, the High Court declined to permit it as no assessors were available for the sessions at Sirsi which was outside the area fixed.¹

- (1) The words 'salaried' in clause (b), "Police Officers and" in clause (d) and the whole clause (i) were not found in the Code of 1882, but have been added in this Code.
- (2) The words "or Air Force" were added in clause (g) by the Repealing and Amending Act X of 1927.

2. Scope of the section.—Under this section, cases of exemption are dealt with, while S. 278 deals with cases of disqualification. Thus, the Code makes a clear distinction between exemption and disqualification. The persons enumerated in this section, though they are capable, are not liable to serve as jurors or assessors (see S. 321). This right to exemption has, however, to be claimed and established (S. 324). Where the proper number of Europeans and Americans cannot otherwise be obtained, even the exempted persons may, under the proviso to S. 326, sub-s.(3), be summoned to try Europeans and Americans.

3. Persons exempted under Civil Procedure Code — Cl. (k).

— Sections 640 and 641 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 are now ss. 132 and 133 of the present Civil Procedure Code of 1908. Under the former section women, who, according to the customs and manners of the country, ought not to be compelled to appear in public, are exempt from personal appearance in Court. Under the latter section, the Provincial Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, exempt from personal appearance in Court any person whose rank entitles him to the privilege of exemption, the names and residences of such persons being forwarded to the High Court.

321.* (1) The Sessions Judge, and the Collector of the district or such other officer as the List of jurors and assessors. Provincial Government^a appoints in this behalf, shall prepare and make out in alphabetical order a list of persons liable to serve as jurors or assessors and qualified in the judgment of the Sessions Judge and Collector or other officer as aforesaid to serve as such, and not likely to be successfully objected to under section 278, clauses (b) to (h), both inclusive.

(2) The list shall contain the name, place of abode and quality or business of every such person ; and, if the person is an European or an American, the list shall mention the race to which he belongs.

(2) In the event of a difference of opinion between the Sessions Judge and the Collector or other officer as aforesaid, the name of the proposed juror or assessor shall be omitted from the list.

(3) A copy of the revised list shall be signed by the Sessions Judge and Collector or other officer as aforesaid and sent to the Court of Session.

Section 325

325.* In the case of any district for which the Provincial Government^a has declared that the trial of certain offences shall, if the Judge so direct, be by special jury, the Sessions Judge and the Collector of such district or other officer as aforesaid shall prepare, in addition to the revised list hereinbefore prescribed, a special list containing the names of such jurors as are borne on the revised list and are, in the opinion of such Sessions Judge and Collector or other officer as aforesaid, by reason of their possessing superior qualifications in respect of property, character or education, fit persons to serve as special jurors: Provided always that the inclusion of the name of any person in such special list shall not involve the removal of his name from the revised list nor relieve him of liability to serve as an ordinary juror in cases not tried by special jury.

a. Substituted by A. O. for "Local Government."

326.† (1) The Sessions Judge shall ordinarily, seven days at least before the day which he may from time to time fix for holding the sessions, send a letter to the District Magistrate requesting him to summon as many persons named in the said revised list or the said special list as seem to the Sessions Judge to be needed for trials by jury and trials with the aid of assessors at the said sessions, the number to be summoned not being less than double the number required for any such trial and including, where any accused person is an European or an American, as many Europeans or Americans as may be required for the purpose of choosing jurors or assessors for the trial.

(2) The names of the persons to be summoned shall be drawn by lot in open Court, excluding those who have served within six months unless the number cannot be made up without them; and the names so drawn shall be specified in the said letter.

(3) Where the accused requires and is entitled to be tried under the provisions of section 275, there shall be chosen by lot, in the manner prescribed by or under section 276, from the whole number of persons returned the jurors who are to constitute the jury until a jury containing the proper number of Europeans or Europeans and Americans or of Indians, as the case may be, has been obtained :

Provided that, in any case in which the proper number of Europeans or Americans cannot otherwise be obtained, the Court may, in its discretion for the purpose of constituting the jury, summon any person excluded from the list on the ground of his being exempted under section 320.

(4) Where, under the proviso to sub-section (3), the Court proposes to summon as a juror any person in His Majesty's Army, the provisions of section 317 shall apply in like manner as they apply for the purpose of the summoning of military jurors for a trial under section 316.

1. Legislative changes.

There was no material difference between the corresponding sections of the Codes of 1861 and 1872.

Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882—

The words "the Sessions Judge" and "for any such trial" were substituted respectively for the words 'the Court' and "for any case about to be tried at such sessions," which occurred in the corresponding section of the Code of 1872.

Changes introduced in the Code of 1898 —

The words 'seven days' were substituted for 'three days' and the words "or the said special list" were added after the words "revised list."

Changes made in 1923 —

The words "and including for the trial" at the end of sub-s. (1) were inserted and sub-ss. (3) and (4) were added by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923.

2. Scope and object of the section. — This section fixes the minimum number of jurors and assessors to be summoned by the Sessions Judge for trials in a session. The normal procedure contemplated is that all jurors or assessors should be summoned on the first day on which a criminal session commences, whatever may be the number of trials it may be proposed to hold in the course of that session.¹

The total number of jurors or assessors so summoned are intended to be available for all the trials, though, in order to fix a minimum, it has been provided that the Judge is to summon at least double the number of jurors or assessors required for any particular trial to be held in the course of the session.²

The object of the section in summoning a number of jurors or assessors is two-fold : firstly, to ensure that there is no reason for suspicion that any of the jurors or assessors sitting on a particular trial has been planted on the Court by any person interested in the success or failure of the prosecution,³ and secondly, to leave a margin for those cases where any particular juror or jurors may claim exemption from being empanelled on the ground of ill-health or some other reason.⁴

The section is not, however, mandatory.⁵ Although the section deals with the summoning of jurors for a particular session and has really no concern with individual cases at all,⁶ the use of the word 'ordinarily' shows that it is neither illegal nor irregular to summon jurors or assessors only for a particular trial and not for the whole of the session or to summon less than eighteen persons for a murder trial so long as the Judge takes care to have summoned a sufficient number of persons to enable him to choose the requisite number of jurors or assessors from among them in the manner provided by law.⁷ In Emperor v. Ermanali,⁸ fourteen persons were summoned to act as jurors in a murder case. Nine of them appeared and were chosen by lot. It was held that the trial was not bad. "It is no part of the intention of the Legislature," said Rankin, C. J., "to have a large area of selection in the persons attending upon summons on the theory that the larger the number of effective names in the ballot, the greater the chance that the persons chosen will make good jurors."

Where, however, in a murder trial, less than eighteen persons are summoned and less than nine are chosen out of them, it cannot be said that it was impracticable to get the requisite number, namely nine and consequently the jury is not a validly constituted one. See Note 4 to section 274.

3. Letter to be sent only by the Sessions Judge. — The duty of issuing a letter or precept imposed on the Sessions Judge by this section cannot legally be performed by a subordinate Judge in temporary charge of the current duties of the Court of Session.¹

4. Assessor not summoned if can be chosen by the Sessions Judge to make up deficiency. — In the case of deficiency of jurors summoned, or where a juror is objected to and the objection is allowed, the deficiency can be made up by choosing from persons present in Court (see S. 276, second proviso and S. 279). There is no such provision applicable to the case of assessors. The Sessions Judge has, therefore, no power to select any one to act as an assessor who has not been summoned under this section.¹ Thus, where the Sessions Judge had requested the District Magistrate to summon five persons to attend as assessors but only one of these persons was present, whereupon the Nazir of the Court was directed by the Judge to act as an assessor, it was held that as the Nazir was neither a person on the list of assessors nor summoned to act as an assessor, the trial was illegal.² But, where out of the assessors summoned only three were present at the date of the trial and the Sessions Judge caused a summons to be served on a gentleman who was present in the Court and whose name was in the list of persons qualified to serve as assessors and chose him as an assessor, it was held that the trial was not illegal.³

5. Names of persons to be drawn by lot.—An accused person has a right to claim to be tried, whether by a jury or with the aid of assessors, chosen with strict regard to all the safeguards provided in the Code to secure perfect impartiality,¹ the object in view being to secure an impartial trial by rendering impossible any intentional selection of jurors or assessors to try a particular case.² Thus, in the interests alike of the jury or the assessors and the prisoner, it is desirable that the persons, who are in fact to serve as jurors or assessors, should not be selected by the conscious choice of any one, whether it be the District Magistrate, the Judge or any other person.³

327.* The Court of Session may direct jurors or assessors to be summoned at other periods than the period specified in section 326, when the number of trials before the Court renders the attendance of one set of jurors or assessors for a whole session oppressive or whenever for other reasons such direction is found to be necessary.

(2) Such fine shall be levied by the District Magistrate by attachment and sale of any moveable property belonging to such juror or assessor within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court making the order.

(3) For good cause shown, the Court may remit or reduce any fine so imposed.

(4) In default of recovery of the fine by attachment and sale, such juror or assessor may, by order of the Court of Session, be imprisoned in the civil jail for the term of fifteen days, unless such fine is paid before the end of the said term.

1. Legislative changes (omitted)

2. Failure to attend — Effect of. — See Note 2 to section 315.

If an assessor has been absent for a long time from district A and has gone to reside in district B, so that he may be said to have almost ceased to be a resident of district A, he is not liable to serve as an assessor in that district under S. 319. Consequently, he cannot be fined under this section for non-attendance as an assessor in obedience to a summons served in district A, of which he had no notice.¹

3. "Shall be liable . . . to a fine." — The order of a Sessions Judge fining an assessor is not open to appeal.¹

4. "For good cause shown." — The fact that an assessor was ill on the day on which he was summoned to act as such and that he had produced a medical certificate to that effect would be a good cause under this section.¹

L.—Special Provisions for High Courts.

333.* At any stage of any trial before a High Court under this Code, before the return of the verdict, the Advocate-General may, if he thinks fit, inform the Court on behalf of Her Majesty that he will not further prosecute the defendant upon the charge; and thereupon all proceedings on such charge against the defendant shall be stayed, and he shall be discharged of and from the same. But such discharge shall not amount to an acquittal unless the presiding Judge otherwise directs.

Power of Advocate-General to stay prosecution.

1. Scope of the section. — The power given to the Advocate-General under this section is the power of entering a nolle prosequi, which is an entry on the record, of a statement that the prosecutor will proceed no further in his action. The power does not depend on the consent of the Court, which a Public Prosecutor has to obtain when acting under section 494. Entering a nolle prosequi is one of the rights and privileges, which an Advocate-General has by virtue of his appointment.¹

2. The Advocate-General may not further prosecute. — A nolle prosequi is entered where any improper and vexatious attempts are made to oppress the defendant, as by repeatedly preferring defective indictments for the same supposed offence, or where it is clear that an indictment is not sustainable against the defendant,¹ or questions of difficulty arise as to the jurisdiction of the Court.^{1a} Thus, where, after a trial had commenced before R and a jury, R retired under s. 556 of the Code and was succeeded by S, and it was objected that S and the jury had no jurisdiction, the Advocate-General was allowed to enter a nolle prosequi.² Similarly, where the jury gave a verdict in a case, before the case for the defence was heard, the Advocate-General entered a nolle prosequi and the accused was discharged.³

3. An order of discharge is no bar to fresh proceedings. — An order of discharge under this section is no bar to fresh proceedings being taken before a competent Magistrate upon complaint, or upon a police-report, or under S.190 (1) (c).¹ The same proceeding, however, in

Provided that, where the offence is under inquiry or trial, no Magistrate of the first class other than the District Magistrate shall exercise the power hereby conferred unless he is the Magistrate making the inquiry or holding the trial, and, where the offence is under investigation, no such Magistrate shall exercise the said power unless he is a Magistrate having jurisdiction in a place where the offence might be inquired into or tried and the sanction of the District Magistrate has been obtained to the exercise thereof.

(1A) Every Magistrate who tenders a pardon under sub-section (1) shall record his reasons for so doing, and shall, on application made by the accused, furnish him with a copy of such record:

Notes 1-2

1. Legislative changes.

Changes introduced by Act XVIII of 1923 —

1. In sub-section (1) —
 - (a) The words “or any offence and 477A” are new. See Note 5.
 - (b) The words “at any stage of the investigation or inquiry into, or trial of, the offence” are new. See Note 7.
 - (c) For the words “with the sanction of the District Magistrate, any other Magistrate,” the proviso to sub-s.(1) has been substituted. See Note 3.
2. The words “and shall, on application made by the accused, furnish him with a copy of such record, “in sub-s.(1A) and the proviso to sub-s.(1A), are new.
3. In sub-s.(2), the words “in the Court of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence and in the subsequent trial, if any” have been substituted for the words “in the case.” See Note 16.
4. Sub-section (4) has been omitted and sub-s.(2A) is new. See Note 18.

2. Scope and object of the section. — This section empowers a Magistrate to tender pardon to a person who is supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in, or privy to, an offence under investigation or inquiry, on condition that he makes a full and true disclosure of all the circumstances within his knowledge in relation to the accused and to the offence. The object of tendering such conditional pardon to an accomplice in the crime is to secure the evidence of such a person; and also to encourage him to give the fullest details in respect of the matter, so that points may be found in his evidence which may be capable of corroboration, especially in cases where it is otherwise impossible to establish the guilt of the accused from other evidence.¹ In the exercise, therefore, of the power to tender a pardon, the Magistrate should exercise a sound judicial discretion,² and proceed with great caution and on ample grounds; and with a clear recognition of the risk which it necessarily involves of allowing an offender to escape just punishment at the expense of possibly innocent men.³ It is thus a wrong exercise of discretion on the part of the Magistrate to tender pardon to a person who is the principal offender in order to obtain evidence against the other accused.⁴

The provisions of this section do not imply that the only method of obtaining the evidence of an accused person against his co-accused is by tendering a pardon to such person with all the conditions and safeguards mentioned in the section.⁵ It is the right of the Crown at any stage to enter nolle prosequi (Ss. 393 and 494) and thereafter call such person as a witness for the Crown.⁶ (See Note 16 and S. 342.) Similarly, there is nothing in the section to compel the police to produce an accused person who is intended to be examined as a witness in the case for the tender of a pardon. The police can refrain from prosecuting such person although there is adequate evidence to justify his prosecution and if they do so, he will be a competent witness in the trial of the other accused. But such a course is to be highly deprecated and the evidence of such a witness will be entitled to little weight.⁷

As special powers are conferred upon the Magistrate by the section, he should exercise such powers in strict accordance with the provisions of the section.⁸

Where action has been taken under this section and a conditional pardon has been tendered and accepted, it is not thereafter open to the prosecution to ignore the provisions of this section and proceed under S. 494. Thus, in such a case, the prosecution against the person who has accepted the pardon cannot be withdrawn under S. 494 and the provisions of sub-s.(2A) of this section which require the case to be tried by a High Court or Sessions Court avoided. In determining whether action has been taken under this section, if the manner in which the tender of pardon is made follows in substance the method prescribed in this section, the section must be held to apply and minor and immaterial irregularities or variations cannot be taken to affect the operation of the section.⁹

3. Who can tender a pardon. — A District Magistrate has power to tender a pardon at any stage of the investigation, inquiry or trial even though he himself may not be holding such inquiry or trial.¹ A Magistrate of the first class, not being a District Magistrate, can tender a pardon only —

(a) in case the offence is under investigation, if he has jurisdiction in the place where the offence might be inquired into and tried, and the sanction of the District Magistrate has been obtained therefor, or

(b) in case the offence is under inquiry or trial, if the case is pending inquiry or trial before him.

The words "District Magistrate" in this section will include an Additional District Magistrate on whom all the powers of a District Magistrate have been conferred under section 10 (2).²

The mere absence of a written sanction of the District Magistrate, where it appears that in fact an oral sanction was given, is only an irregularity which, under S. 529, is not sufficient to vitiate the proceedings if it was obtained in good faith.³

The tender of pardon being a judicial function⁴ the Magistrate empowered to exercise such function cannot delegate it to a police-officer or to a subordinate Magistrate.⁵ Where a Magistrate, not empowered by law to tender a pardon, erroneously in good faith tenders such pardon under this section, the proceedings cannot be set aside merely on the ground of his not being so empowered [S. 529, clause (g)]. But if a Magistrate, who has no jurisdiction in respect of such offence, tenders a pardon, such pardon is illegal and the defect cannot be cured under S. 529.⁶ The person to whom such illegal pardon is tendered continues to be an accused person and can be tried and convicted along with the other accused.⁷ He cannot be examined as a witness (section 342), and if he has been examined, his evidence is inadmissible.⁸

A special Magistrate appointed under S. 24 of the Bengal Suppression of Terrorist Outrages Act (XII of 1932) has power to tender a pardon under this section.⁹

conditional pardon. Such pardon can be tendered only by the Magistrate and the Courts specified in ss. 337 and 338.¹ But the fact that the Magistrate in tendering the pardon did so after consulting the Provincial Government and with its authority is an internal matter of administration which cannot affect the position of the accused or the approver.² The Provincial Government has, however, power under S. 401 to remit or suspend sentences passed against the accused.

As to the exercise of the Royal Prerogative of mercy, see S. 401.

5. Offences in respect of which pardon may be tendered.—The jurisdiction to tender a pardon to an accomplice is strictly limited to such offences as are specifically mentioned in the section itself.¹ It is determined with reference to the offence in respect of which the investigation is being made or the inquiry or trial is held, and is not affected in any manner by a subsequent alteration of the charge or offence or by the ultimate result of the investigation, inquiry or trial,² or by the fact that there are also other offences alleged or charged against the accused.^{2a} All that is necessary is that there should be an investigation or inquiry in progress relating to an offence referred to in the section.³ The words “triable exclusively by the High Court or a Court of Session” mean “shown in the second schedule as so triable.”⁴ Before the amendment of 1923, conditional pardon could be granted only in cases of offences triable by a Court of Session or High Court.⁵

Section 337 Notes 4-5

Section 337
Notes 5-7

The amended section provides specifically for tender of pardon in respect of several other offences enumerated in the section.⁶

6. Effect of tendering pardon in other cases.— Where a pardon is granted in respect of an offence not specified in the section and the person to whom pardon is granted is examined as a witness, such evidence is inadmissible. The reason is that as the pardon is unauthorized, the person continues to be an accused person and no oath can be administered to him.¹ See S. 342. Nor can such person be prosecuted for giving false evidence.²

7. Stage at which pardon can be tendered.— Before the amendment of 1923, the Magistrate could tender a pardon only in respect of the "offence under inquiry" and there was a conflict of decisions as to whether the word "inquiry" included also the stage of the investigation by the police.¹ The amended section has definitely set the conflict at rest by specifically providing that the pardon may be granted even at the stage of the investigation by the police.² The Magistrate has power to tender a pardon at any stage, i. e., until he commits the accused under sub-s. (2A) or discharges the accused.³ The mere fact that the case is adjourned on application under S. 526 does

8. "Supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in, or privy to, the offence." — The expression "any person supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in, or privy to, the offence," is a wide one and is not necessarily confined to a person who has been charged with the offence or who has been sent up by the police for trial, as an accused person.¹ It is not necessary that he should exactly know what crime is being committed in all its details.² All that is requisite is that there should be the intention of assisting in the commission of the crime³ and that the Magistrate should be satisfied that he himself took part in the crime to the extent that he admits and that he is in a position to give a true account as to what occurred.⁴

An accomplice is different from a "spy." An accomplice is a person who concurs fully in the criminal designs of his co-conspirators for a time and joins in the execution of those designs; while a spy or informer does not concur in those designs but enters into the conspiracy as agent for the prosecution for the sole purpose of detecting and disclosing it and of bringing the offenders to justice.⁵

The word "supposed" does not exclude a person who confesses the guilt and pleads guilty to the charge, but is yet unconvicted; it merely excludes the person who has been already convicted of the offence.⁶

9. Condition of pardon. — It has been already seen in Note 2 that the object of tendering a pardon is to encourage the approver to give the fullest details, so that points may be found in his evidence which may be capable of corroboration. The law, therefore, requires, not a cramped and constrained statement by the approver, but a thorough and complete disclosure of all the facts within his knowledge bearing upon the offence or offences as to which he gives evidence.¹

It should, however, be borne in mind that the temptation to the accomplice to strain the truth should be as slight as possible and it is illegal to tender a pardon on condition that the prisoner should profess to have been present at the murder and to have personal knowledge of the circumstances under which the offence took place as alleged by the prosecution.² As to the effect of a breach of the conditions of pardon, see section 339.

10. Procedure in tendering pardon. — The tender of pardon should be made by the Magistrate directly and should not be made through any police-officer.¹ The Magistrate should, at the time, explain to the person to whom it is made all the conditions accompanying such tender of pardon and should also record his reasons for tendering the pardon (sub-s.(1A)). If the person does not accept the conditions, the inquiry or trial will proceed as if no tender of pardon was made. If such person should accept the conditions, it is the duty of the Magistrate to examine him as a witness under the rules applicable for the examination of witnesses.² As to whether the Magistrate should record informal statements from the person at the time of tendering the pardon, see Note 13.

11. Recording reasons for tendering pardon. — It has been seen already in Note 2 that the Magistrate should tender a pardon to an accomplice only on ample grounds and in exceptional cases and that he should exercise a sound judicial discretion before taking such a step. Sub-section (1A) provides that it is his duty to record his reasons for so doing and that the accused is entitled to a copy thereof.¹ Where, however, the circumstances which preceded the grant of pardon provide by themselves sufficient grounds for the Magistrate's action and such circumstances appear on record, it is not necessary for the Magistrate to formally set out such circumstances in writing.² Similarly, where the Magistrate states in his order that in order to connect the accused with the offence of a certain murder, it is essential to make an approver in the case, there is sufficient compliance with the provisions of sub-s.(1A) of this section.³ The recording of reasons is merely a matter relating to procedure and is not a condition precedent to the tender of pardon.⁴ Thus, an omission to record the reasons amounts only to an irregularity⁵ and will not vitiate the trial, unless it is shown that it has, in fact, occasioned a failure of justice.⁶ See section 537.

12. Accepting pardon. — A person can be said to accept a pardon tendered to him only when he actively assents to the conditions of the pardon and volunteers to make a statement with reference to the offence. Where he expresses complete ignorance and states that he is indifferent as to whether a pardon is granted or not, he cannot be said to accept a tender of pardon.¹ But it is not necessary that the acceptance of the pardon should be in writing or that it should be expressed in any other manner. It can be gathered from the circumstances. Thus, the fact that he appears before the Magistrate in the capacity of a witness and not in the capacity of an accused person, is a clear indication of the fact that he has accepted the pardon tendered to him.²

13. Disclosure, whether should be recorded at the time of the tender of pardon. — The section does not contemplate the recording of any statement by the proposed approver before the pardon is granted to him.¹

There is a conflict of decisions as to whether, after the pardon has been granted, the approver can be examined on oath before the preliminary inquiry in the committing Magistrate's Court. One view is that such an examination is permissible under S. 164² and the other view is that it is not.³ As there does not seem to be any reason why

s. 164 should not apply to such cases, it is submitted that the former view is correct.

14. Effect of pardon. — Where a pardon is tendered and accepted under this section, the accused person ceases to be such from the moment the pardon is accepted and is to be treated as a witness thereafter. It is not necessary that the prosecution should be withdrawn in such cases.¹

A pardon tendered under this section refers not only to the offence in respect of which it is tendered, but extends to all such offences also in connection with the same matter, as the approver has necessarily to disclose, in making a full and true disclosure of all the circumstances relating to such offence.² In Queen-Empress v. Ganga Charan,³ Straight, J., observed as follows :

“While, on the one hand, the condition is ‘a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge relative to such offence,’ on the other, a non-compliance with it leaves him open to trial for the offence in respect of which the pardon was tendered, or any other offence in connection with the same matter. It must be borne in mind that, in countenancing these pardons to accomplices, the law does not invite a cramped and constrained statement by the approver; on the contrary it requires a thorough and complete disclosure of all the facts within his knowledge bearing upon the offence, or offences, as to which he gives evidence, and when he has given his evidence, I do not think that the question of how far it is to protect him, and what portion of it should not protect him, ought to be treated in a narrow spirit.”

Where, however, the statement of the person to whom a pardon was tendered disclosed a distinct offence of dacoity which was committed one month prior to the offence in respect of which the pardon was tendered, it was held that the tender of pardon did not extend to such an offence.⁴ See also section 339 Note 6.

15. Forfeiture of pardon. — See Section 339.

16. Examination of approver as witness — Sub-section (2). — Sub-section (2), as it stood before the amendment of 1923, provided that the person accepting a tender of pardon should be examined as a witness “in the case,” and it was held in the undermentioned cases¹ that the words “in the case” referred both to the magisterial inquiry and to the sessions trial and that therefore the approver ought to be examined in the sessions trial notwithstanding he did not fulfil the conditions of pardon in the magisterial inquiry. It was, however, held in other cases that if the approver should show an inclination to resile from his evidence before the committing Magistrate, the prosecution was not bound to examine him as a witness in the sessions trial as his examination before the committing Magistrate is a sufficient compliance with the provisions of sub-s.(2).² The amended section now specifically provides that such person should be examined as a witness in the Magistrate's Court and in the subsequent trial, if any.³ There is still a conflict of decisions whether the section makes it obligatory on the prosecution to examine the approver in the Sessions Court where in the committing Magistrate's Court he has resiled from his former position and broken the condition of his pardon. The Lahore High Court⁴ and the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court⁵ have held that the approver must be examined in the Sessions Court even in such cases, while the opposite view has been expressed by the Calcutta High Court.⁶

17. Evidence of an accomplice — Credibility of. — In dealing with the question as to the weight to be attached to the evidence of an accomplice, it is necessary to consider the provisions of S. 133 of the Evidence Act, as also illustration (b) to S. 114 of that Act. Section 133 of that Act provides as follows:

"An accomplice shall be a competent witness against an accused person; and a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice."

Illustration (b) to section 114 runs as follows: "The Court may presume that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars."¹ The reasons underlying the and it cannot be affirmed that in no circumstances can the evidence of one accomplice be used to corroborate that of another.¹² In this connexion, the following observations of a Full Bench of the Rangoon High Court^{12a} may be quoted :

"From a consideration of all the matters to be dealt with it is apparent : First : Provided it has been established by extraneous evidence or matters appearing on the record that the accomplices are not acting in collusion with one another, the cumulative effect of the evidence of two or more of them may be sufficient to remove the prima facie presumption of the individual unworthiness of credit of their statements, and, if this be the case, a conviction may legitimately be recorded upon their statements alone, if the Court is convinced of their truth. The same observation applies to the cumulative effect of the evidence of an accomplice and the confession of a co-accused where the presumption of their unreliability has, in the special circumstances, been rebutted. Secondly : That evidence from a source which is not prima facie unworthy of credit may prove a fact which displaces in a particular case the presumption that an accomplice is unworthy of credit. Thirdly : That corroboration must proceed from a source extraneous to the person whose testimony it is sought to corroborate. But it may consist of extraneous proof of a fact relating to that very person's prior conduct."

It is not enough if the corroborative evidence is of a vague or general nature and relates merely to the circumstances of the occurrence or to the details of the crime.¹³ It should refer and relate distinctly to the complicity of the accused in such offence and also to the identity of each of the accused.¹⁴

Notes 18-19

The fact that the Magistrate in tendering the pardon did so after consulting the Provincial Government and with its authority will not affect the position of the accused or the approver, and once pardon has been tendered, the trial must not be by another Magistrate, even though he is vested under S. 30 to try such an offence, but by the High Court or the Sessions Court.⁶

19. Detention of approver in custody — Sub-section (3). —

If the person to whom a pardon is tendered is not already on bail, he has to be detained in judicial custody until the termination of the trial; he cannot be released on bail under the provisions of Ss. 497 and 498.¹ The custody contemplated is judicial custody and is not the custody of the police.² The approver should be detained in such custody until the proceedings are terminated by a magisterial order of discharge or until after the termination of the sessions trial.³

There is no jurisdiction to order the detention of the approver till the expiration of the period of limitation for filing an appeal from the decision in the case. His detention can only be ordered till the termination of the trial.⁴

or indirectly concerned in, or privy to, any such offence, tender, or order the committing Magistrate or the District Magistrate to tender, a pardon on the same condition to such person.

1. Scope of the section.—Section 337 provides for tender of pardon to an accomplice during the stage of investigation or of inquiry into the offence by a Magistrate. This section enables the Sessions Judge to tender, or direct the Magistrate or District Magistrate to tender, a pardon after the commitment of the case.¹ He has power to tender a pardon or to direct the tender of pardon at any time before judgment is pronounced;² but he should not exercise such power after the evidence for the prosecution and of the defence has been taken and the opinion of the assessors has also been given.³ Where the tender of pardon made by the Magistrate is bound to be invalid, the Sessions Judge may make a valid tender of pardon under this section.⁴

2. Offences in respect of which pardon may be tendered.—A pardon may be tendered, under this section, in respect of any of the offences mentioned in S. 337, after the case has been committed by the Magistrate under sub-s. (2A) of that section. See section 337 Note 5.

1. Legislative changes.

Changes introduced by the Code of 1898 —

In sub-section (2) the word "forfeited" has been substituted for the word "withdrawn." See Note 4.

Changes introduced by Act XVIII of 1923 —

- (1) In sub-s.(1), the words "and the Public Prosecutor certifies that in his opinion" are new. See Note 2.
- (2) The proviso to sub-s.(1) is new. See Note 7.
- (3) The words "such person may be" after the words "was made" in sub-s.(1) were substituted for the words "he may be."
- (4) The words "at such trial" at the end of sub-s.(2) were substituted for the words "when the pardon has been forfeited under this section."

2. The certificate of the Public Prosecutor. — Prior to the amendment of 1923, if the approver did not comply with the conditions of pardon, the Court before which his evidence was given, could only record its opinion to the effect that he had not complied with the conditions of the pardon and leave it to the District Magistrate to prosecute him, if he thought fit to do so; it could not itself direct a prosecution.¹ It was, however, held in the undermentioned cases² that a Sessions Judge, before whom the evidence of the approver was given, could himself order the approver to be committed to trial, if he found that he did not comply with the conditions of the pardon. See also the undermentioned cases,³ decided before the amendment of 1923. These cases are no longer of any importance in view of the amendment of 1923, making the certificate of the Public Prosecutor, the sole basis for the prosecution of the approver for the original offence.⁴ The Sessions Judge has, thus, no power to order the prosecution of the approver suo motu.⁵ Where, however, proceedings had already been instituted against the approver under this section before the date on which the amendment took effect, it was held that the certificate of the Public Prosecutor was not necessary.⁶

Section 339
Notes 2-3

The certificate, which is required as a condition precedent to the trial of an approver, has to be filed before his trial commences in the Court of Session. It is not absolutely essential to file it in the committing Court and even if it is so, the absence of it is not fatal and the commitment can, in view of S. 532, be accepted by the Court of Session.⁷

This section does not require that the particulars in regard to which the pardon is alleged to have been forfeited should be given in the certificate, and a certificate cannot be said to be defective if it does not mention such particulars.⁸

It has been held that the person who is authorized to grant a certificate under this section is the Public Prosecutor who conducted the case in which the pardon was granted and that he need not necessarily occupy the position of Public Prosecutor on the date on which he grants the certificate.⁹ But where a case was conducted by an Assistant Public Prosecutor in the Sessions Court and he expressed his intention not to take action against the approver, but subsequently the Public Prosecutor issued a certificate under this section, it was held that the certificate was not without jurisdiction.¹⁰

3. "Any person who has accepted such tender." — In a proceeding against the approver under this section, it should first be proved that the approver accepted the conditions of the pardon;¹ that is, that the conditions were fully explained to him, that he was free to accept or refuse the conditions and that he accepted the tender of pardon on a full understanding of such conditions.² It is also open to a person, who has accepted a pardon in the first instance, to resile from such acceptance and say that he may be tried in respect of the original offence in order that his character may be cleared. In such cases, the provisions of this section do not apply and he may be tried jointly with the other accused.³ See also S. 337.

4. Non-compliance with the conditions. — Prior to the Code of 1898, the Magistrate or the Sessions Judge had to withdraw the pardon tendered to an approver under S. 337 or S. 338, before the approver could be tried for the offence, in respect of which the pardon was tendered.¹ Under the present Code, however, no such order is necessary and the only question, which the Court has to consider, before trying the approver for the original offence, is whether he has, by some act or omission on his part, failed to comply with the conditions of pardon.² It is the duty of the prosecution to establish that the approver has failed to comply with the conditions of the pardon,^{2a} either —

(a) by wilfully concealing anything essential, or

(b) by wilfully giving false evidence.³

The mere fact that his alleged associates in crime, against whom he had given evidence, have been acquitted,⁴ or that the Sessions Judge or the Magistrate is of opinion that he was not telling the truth,⁵ or that the facts stated by him are not probable,⁶ or the mere fact that some discrepancies have been elicited from him in cross-examination,⁷

or that there are certain inconsistencies in his evidence on immaterial points,⁸ is not sufficient to show that the condition of the pardon has not been complied with. Where, however, the approver wilfully introduces discrepancies into his deposition, in order that the Court may hold that he is not a reliable witness, he forfeits his pardon.⁹

The Lahore High Court has held that it is not strictly necessary that the prosecution should have actually examined the approver as a witness, both before the Magistrate's Court and the Sessions Court, before proceedings are instituted against him for non-compliance with the conditions of pardon, and that it is enough, if he is shown to have made a statement absolutely inconsistent with the statement that he made at the time the pardon was tendered to him.¹⁰ But the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court has taken a different view.¹¹ Where the evidence given by an approver in the sessions trial is not a compliance with the conditions of the pardon, the fact that he gave evidence in accordance with the conditions before the committing Magistrate does not save him from being proceeded against under this section.¹² But when the evidence given by the approver in the Sessions Court was in accordance with the conditions of his pardon and was evidence upon which, in the circumstances subsequently disclosed, reliance might have been placed, then the fact that in the committing Magistrate's Court the approver gave false evidence should not necessarily be taken to be non-compliance with the conditions of pardon.¹³

5. "Wilfully concealing anything essential." — The prosecution has to establish that certain essential facts were within the knowledge of the approver, and that he had wilfully concealed such facts.¹ The mere fact that the approver absconded at the time does not amount to a wilful concealment of anything essential within the meaning of the section.²

As has been seen in Note 9 to S. 337, it is the duty of the approver to make a thorough and complete disclosure of all facts within his knowledge bearing upon the offence or offences in respect of which he is giving evidence. Thus, he is not bound, in fulfilment of the conditions of pardon, to make any disclosure relative to any offence, which was not being inquired into at the time.³

6. Effect of pardon. — Where pardon is tendered to a person, on condition that he should make a true and full disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge relative to the offence, it is a matter of utmost importance that the strictest faith should be kept with him.¹ Thus, where a person is granted a pardon, and being under the impression that he has freed himself from the consequences of his incriminating statements, he makes a disclosure of his complicity in offences, other than those in respect of which he was granted a pardon, it would be improper to institute proceedings against him in respect of such other offences.² See also section 337 Note 14.

7. Procedure at the trial — Joint trial. — Prior to the amendment of 1923, there was a conflict of opinions as to whether an approver, who had broken the conditions of pardon, could be tried for the offence for which he was tendered a pardon, along with the other accused, or whether his trial ought to be in a separate proceeding altogether. It was held in one set of cases that there was no provision in the Code prohibiting a joint trial, and if an approver had been committed in time, it was not illegal to try him jointly with the other accused for the original offence.¹ It was, however, held in another set of cases that the trial of the approver on the original charge ought to be in a separate proceeding altogether, which should commence de novo after the case, in which he had given evidence, had been fully heard and determined;² and that he should not be put into the dock, after his evidence is given, to be tried jointly along with the other accused.^{2a} The proviso to sub-section (1) has been introduced by the amendment of 1923, which specifically provides that the approver should not be tried jointly with the other accused.³

Section 339.

Until the termination of the trial, in which the approver has given evidence, he has to be in judicial custody unless he had already been admitted to bail (see sub-s.(3) to S. 337). At the termination of the trial, however, he should be discharged by the Court which tries the case. But the Crown may re-arrest him and proceed against him for the offence in respect of which he was granted a conditional pardon, if so advised;⁴ that is, as has been seen in Note 2 already, if the Public Prosecutor certifies that the approver had failed to comply with the conditions of the pardon. In such proceedings, the approver is entitled to plead the tender of pardon and the compliance of the conditions thereof, in bar of the trial for the original offence, and the Court has to decide and give its finding as to that plea. See S. 339A, and the undermentioned cases.⁵

him, in case he is proceeded against under this section on account of his non-compliance with the conditions of the pardon. Thus, the admissibility of such a statement is not affected by S. 24 of the Evidence Act.¹ But it has been held in the undermentioned decisions² that S. 339 (2) operates as an exception to S. 24 of the Evidence Act only in respect of statements which have been induced by a promise of pardon and that statements obtained by threats or violence are still within the mischief of S. 24 of the Evidence Act. Before a statement of the approver is used in the trial against him, it is necessary that it should be properly proved that it should be put to him and that he should be asked, if he desires to offer any explanations thereon.³

Sub-section (2) applies not only to statements by the approver in the committing Magistrate's Court or in the Sessions Court but also to statements made by him before the inquiry in the committing Magistrate's Court,⁴ provided they were made after the offer and acceptance of pardon by the approver.⁵

It is not absolutely necessary that the approver should have been examined as a witness as provided under S. 337, sub-s.(2) before any statements made by him are used in evidence against him.⁶ Though the statement or deposition of the approver is not strictly a confession, it is in the nature of a confession, and the Court should, in case it is

Sub-section (2) does not bar the use of the statements made by the approver, in an inquiry into the offence of perjury against the approver,⁸ or in a civil suit for damages brought against him by the complainant.⁹

10. Prosecution for perjury—Sanction of the High Court.—Under sub-s. (3) it is essential that the prosecution should obtain the sanction of the High Court before proceeding against the approver for giving false evidence, and if such sanction is not obtained before the institution of the proceedings, the defect affects the jurisdiction of the Court and cannot be cured under S. 537.¹ The application for sanction to prosecute the approver should be made on behalf of the Crown by a regular application to the High Court, and a letter of reference by the Sessions Judge is not sufficient.²

The High Court is not bound to accord sanction in every case that is brought to its notice under sub-s. (3) of this section^{2a} but has a discretion in the matter. The discretion vested in the High Court to sanction the prosecution of the approver for perjury should be exercised with extreme caution.³ The necessity for obtaining the previous sanction of the High Court shows that the mere fact that the approver makes two inconsistent statements cannot be a justification for directing his prosecution.⁴ The

High Court, before granting a sanction, should carefully consider all the circumstances in the case and decide the cardinal question, whether the previous statement or confession was true and voluntary.⁵ If it is of opinion that such previous statement is true on the facts before it, then his subsequent statement ought to be false, and in such cases it is not only desirable but also expedient to sanction the prosecution.⁶ If, however, the first statement or confession is not true, but that his later statement is the true one, then the inference may be drawn that the first statement or confession was obtained by threat or inducement and in such cases it would be undesirable to sanction the prosecution.⁷ The High Court has also a discretion in cases where the approver is induced to make certain statements in connexion with a capital charge to allow him every possible locus poenitentiae in respect of such a statement.⁸ Where the approver is proceeded against for the original offence itself, in respect of which he was tendered a pardon, it is not proper to sanction his prosecution for perjury.⁹ Such sanction should be granted only in case it appears to the High Court that a conviction for the original offence is unlikely for any reason, or that even on a conviction on the original charge the sentence that could be passed would be too light in the circumstances of the case.¹⁰

Sub-section (3) merely imposes an additional condition to the institution of a prosecution for perjury and does not have the effect of overriding the provisions of S. 476. Thus, even where the sanction of the High Court is obtained, the prosecution could be instituted only in accordance with the provisions of Ss. 195 and 476.¹¹ The High Court may grant sanction for prosecution on the strength of a statement made by the approver which is prima facie false; it is not necessary that the approver should have been examined as a witness in the case, as required by section 337, sub-section (2).¹² person under S. 339. of pardon shall —

(a) if the Court is a High Court or Court of Session, before the charge is read out and explained to the accused under section 271, sub-section (1), and

(b) if the Court is the Court of a Magistrate, before the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution is taken, ask the accused whether he pleads that he has complied with the conditions on which the tender of the pardon was made.

(2) If the accused does so plead, the Court shall record the plea and proceed with the trial, and the jury, or the Court with the aid of the assessors, or the Magistrate, as the case may be, shall, before judgment is passed in the case find whether or not the accused has complied with the conditions of the pardon, and, if it is found that he has so complied, the Court shall, notwithstanding anything contained in this Code, pass judgment of acquittal.

1. Legislative changes.

This section has been newly introduced by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, XVIII of 1923 : see Note 3.

2. Plea of pardon. — The procedure laid down under this section should be strictly followed.¹ It is the duty of the Court to explain the provisions of this section clearly to the accused and to tell him that he is entitled to plead that he has complied with the conditions of the pardon.² The mere fact that the accused raised such a plea before the committing Magistrate, and that the Magistrate had given his finding on such a plea, does not absolve the Sessions Judge from the duty cast upon him, under this section, of asking the accused, if he pleads compliance with the conditions of the pardon.³

3. Procedure under this section. — Before the introduction of this section in 1923, it was held that where the approver raised a plea that he had complied with the conditions of the pardon, it was the duty of the Court to decide and give a finding on that issue first, before trying him for the offence, in respect of which the pardon was tendered.¹ Such a course, necessarily, led to complications inasmuch as, in deciding the preliminary issue, the Court had very often to investigate into the facts of the case and to prejudge it on the merits.² These cases are no longer of any importance in view of this section, which provides specifically for the procedure to be adopted in such cases.³ Under this section, the accused should be asked at the very commencement of the proceeding, whether he pleads compliance with the conditions of the pardon. The Court has to record such a plea in case he so pleads and to proceed with the trial. In the course of the trial, however, and before judgment is pronounced, the Court should decide the question whether the accused has complied with the conditions of the pardon. If it is found that he has so complied with them, the Court has to pass at once a judgment of acquittal, whatever its finding may be, as to the guilt of the accused in respect of the offence.⁴ It is for the Crown to prove that the pardon has been forfeited by the approver.^{4a}

In a case triable by the jury, the question whether the accused has complied with the conditions of the pardon should be left to the jury to be decided, like any other question of fact in the case⁵ and in a case triable with the aid of assessors, the Court should, after recording the plea, call upon the assessors to deliver their opinions on that plea and then record its own finding.⁶

Where on grant of pardon the approver admits his complicity in the offence but later resiles completely from his position and he is tried under S. 339, it is impossible to decide whether he has complied with the condition of his pardon without deciding the question of his innocence or guilt. Hence, in such cases, the provision in sub-s.(2) of this section viz., that the question as to compliance with the condition of the pardon should be decided before judgment is passed in the case, cannot apply.⁷

1. Scope. — The old section which read “every person accused before any criminal Court may of right be defended by a pleader” gave rise to speculation as to the scope of the word “accused.” Some decisions favoured a wide interpretation of the word so as to cover any person over whom a Magistrate or other Court exercises jurisdiction.¹ Consonant to this interpretation, the section was held to apply to persons against whom proceedings were instituted under Chapter VIII² and Chapter XI.³ Other decisions, however, regarded the above definition as too wide and confined the word “accused” to those persons who were accused of an offence.⁴ In conformity with this view the section was held inapplicable to persons concerned in proceedings under Division C of Chapter VIII.⁵ It was also doubted whether pleaders could appear in proceedings under S. 62 of the Code of 1861, corresponding to S. 144 of the present Code.⁶

These questions are now set at rest by the amendment of the section by Act XVIII of 1923 whereby it has been expressly made applicable not only to persons accused of an offence but to any person against whom proceedings are instituted under the Code in any criminal Court.⁷

The section is confined in terms to persons against whom proceedings are taken. But even complainants have been held to have the legal right to be represented by counsel; of course when Government takes up the prosecution the officer acting on behalf of the Government will take the lead.⁸ The Crown is entitled as of right to be heard by counsel or pleader in support of each prosecution whether in an original or appellate Court.⁹

2. "Proceedings under this Code." — Proceedings under Chapter X are criminal proceedings.¹ An application by the police for remand falls under S. 167 of the Code and can be held to be a proceeding instituted under the Code in a criminal Court. Therefore, at least from the moment (after the twenty-four hours of arrest) that the accused appears before the Court, his right to be defended begins. Hence access to him by his legal advisers should be allowed irrespective of whether a charge-sheet has been sent up or not.²

Both before and after the amendment, it has been held that a person with regard to whom a preliminary enquiry under S. 202 is being held is not entitled by any rule of law to intervene.³ But he may watch the proceedings which means, not merely as an on-looker but instructing legal practitioners to watch the case on his behalf, with the leave of the Court, to assist the Court in making the investigation.⁴ See also Note 12 under S. 202.

A civil Court making an enquiry under S. 476 does not thereby become a criminal Court and S. 340 will not apply to such proceedings. But the general practice is to hear pleaders on behalf of persons in civil and criminal matters and to secure their assistance as amicus curiæ even when parties have no right to be heard either in person or by pleader.⁵

In a case decided before the amendment, it was observed that accused persons are not entitled to be represented before public officers in the absence of express statutory provision and that they are not entitled to be represented when being dealt with under Chapters XXVIII and XXIX of the Code.⁶

Notes 3-4

3. Appellate and revisional Courts. — The section has been held to be as applicable to an appellate Court as to the Court in which the charge was originally brought, an appeal being to all intents and purposes a trial.¹ This was doubted in an earlier case (under the Code of 1861) but even there it was conceded that though this section might not apply, the appellant's right to be represented by an authorised agent was recognised by S. 417 and S. 419 of the Code corresponding to Ss. 419 and 423 respectively of the present Code.²

The right of persons to appear personally or by pleader before Courts exercising powers of revision is expressly excluded by S. 440.³

4. "May of right be defended." — The accused is entitled to be represented by a pleader.¹ Where this right is denied, a re-trial will be ordered.² It is necessary that notice of the date fixed for hearing should be given to the accused; for, otherwise the right given under this section cannot be exercised by him.^{2a} Full opportunity should be afforded to the accused to get proper legal advice and assistance before he is called upon to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses.³ It will not be giving him a reasonable time to ask him immediately after the framing of the charge to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses.⁴ If the accused had had no sufficient opportunity before the commencement of the proceedings to engage a pleader, it has been held that the proper course is for the Magistrate to proceed with the examination-in-chief of the prosecution witnesses and then give the accused an opportunity of engaging a pleader by adjourning the case for a reasonable period, what is a proper period being a question for reasonable decision in each case.⁵ It must be remembered, however, that the services of a counsel are necessary even when witnesses are examined-in-chief, not only to check leading questions but to prevent irrelevant evidence being recorded.⁶

A Magistrate exercises jurisdiction with material irregularity when he holds a trial at a place where the accused are totally incapable of making a proper defence and are deprived of the opportunity of being represented by a pleader.⁷ Where a Magistrate held Court on a Sunday, it was held that, though holding Court on a Sunday was in itself not an illegality, yet the effect having been to prejudice the accused and deprive him of the right given to him under S. 340, the conviction should be set aside.⁸ A conviction was, however, allowed to stand, where, though the action of a Magistrate in accelerating a case had resulted in depriving the accused of the services of his senior counsel, the accused had, nevertheless, not been prejudiced thereby.⁹

An appellant is entitled to be heard through his pleader.¹⁰ A Judge contravenes the provisions of the Code in deciding an appeal without hearing counsel on such a date as to make it physically impossible for counsel to attend when the Judge had before him a petition from the accused's counsel praying to be heard.¹¹

When a person is not defended, the Magistrate or Judge ought, in the interests of justice, to test the accuracy of statements of witnesses by questions in the nature of cross-examination,¹² and in the cases of ignorant individuals accused of technical offences, to assist them in putting up obvious defensive pleas.¹³

Similarly, in cases where the prisoner being too poor to defend himself, a lawyer has been engaged to defend him at the expense of the Crown, the trial Judge must use his greater experience to cross-examine the witnesses when he sees that the defence lawyer is incompetent. He should not, however, do this unnecessarily but only when it is desirable in the interest of justice.¹⁴

5. Right of accused while in custody.—The section not only contemplates that the accused should be defended by a pleader at the time proceedings are actually going on, but also implies that he shall have a reasonable opportunity, if in custody, of getting into communication with his pleader and preparing for his defence.¹ So, when accused is on remand, he has a right to have access to his legal adviser subject to such legitimate restrictions as may be necessary to prevent interference with the course of investigation.² A remand is a process of Court and it would be an abuse of that process if the police were to take advantage of it to prevent the accused from having access to his legal advisers. The High Court can, therefore, interfere under S. 561A to prevent such abuse.³

Where the accused were arrested and placed in custody and then suddenly called upon to conduct their case without any opportunity having been given to them of obtaining legal assistance, the procedure was held to be irregular.⁴

Pending his trial, a police-officer was put under certain restraints by his superior officers which hampered him in arranging for his defence. It was held that full opportunity should be given to the under-trial officer to consult his legal advisers and that all reasonable facilities should be afforded to him for the conduct of his defence.⁵ While it is beyond the province of the High Court to interfere with the discipline of the police force or the exercise by the superior officers of their lawful powers, it is nevertheless bound to satisfy itself that the conditions under which the accused is being tried do not hamper him in his defence.⁶

Although sufficient means should be adopted to prevent under-trial prisoners from escaping when holding an interview with their vakils, police or other persons should not be placed sufficiently near to overhear their conversation.⁷

6. Choice of pleader. — Prisoners are to have the fullest opportunity to execute vakalatnamas to whomsoever they please.¹

Notes 6-6a

An accused person has a right to be defended by a pleader of his choice and a Magistrate has no right to tell him to engage another pleader as the one he had engaged did not know how to behave.² No Court has any authority to force upon an accused person the services of a counsel if he is unwilling to accept them.³ Where the accused declines to accept the services of a counsel appointed by the Court and raises his objection at the earliest possible opportunity and neither instructs such counsel nor is allowed to conduct his own defence, the irregularity of the procedure results in an illegal trial and hence in a failure of justice. In such cases the High Court will order a new trial.⁴ The Magistrate is bound to afford the accused and his friends every opportunity of making his defence and should not personally interpose between them. He is not justified in refusing the pleader an interview with the accused or a seat in Court.⁵ A Judge cannot, however, be said to act contrary to S. 340, by interfering in a dispute between a counsel assigned for the defence and another counsel who is asked to associate himself with the former and in deciding that the defence should be conducted by the former.⁶

6a. Appointment of defence counsel by the Crown. — There is no rule providing for the employment of counsel at the expense of the Government in an enquiry before a Magistrate, but on principle there is no objection to such employment if the Crown is prepared to pay for the services of a pleader. But when the Sessions Judge or the Magistrate engages a counsel for the defence of an accused, he does so with the express or implied consent of the latter and the Court has no authority to force upon him the services of a counsel if he is unwilling to accept them.¹ See also Note 6.

In selecting lawyers to defend prisoners who are too poor to instruct counsel on their own account, those whose duty it is to select lawyers to defend at the expense of the Crown, should not treat the selection as a matter of patronage for the benefit of the lawyers so appointed. The selection should be made from among young men of marked ability.²

7. Arguments. — A Court is bound to hear arguments offered at any criminal trial or proceeding.¹ It is not a question of indulgence but of right, as it is an elementary principle of law that no order ought to be made to a man's prejudice without hearing him.² Refusal to hear arguments is not a mere irregularity but an illegality.³ But where the pleaders do not attend on the day fixed for hearing arguments, the Court can pronounce judgment without hearing them⁴ and a Magistrate may cut short an argument which has proceeded for an inordinate length of time.⁵ Where a court witness was examined after the close of both parties' case and arguments, and the Magistrate was not requested to hear further arguments, it was held that no objection could be entertained in revision.⁶

Where a counsel is entitled to be heard, he is entitled generally to be heard by an oral address and not by a written speech.⁷ It is the duty of the presiding officer to take such notes of the arguments as he thinks fit when they are being submitted to the Court.⁸ The practice of allowing counsel to file memoranda of arguments has been held to be improper, especially so when they are taken behind the back of one of the parties.⁹ If in any case a pleader desires to submit to the Court the notes of his argument or of any further argument, which he thinks in the interest of his client ought to be put before the Court, he should submit them to the pleader for the opposite party, so that the latter may have an opportunity of making any remarks or any criticism in respect thereof.¹⁰ Not hearing counsel, but requiring him to file a written argument, is, however, not an illegality but an irregularity which may be waived.¹¹ Where a counsel on behalf of his client is entitled to be last heard in the matter, he cannot be deprived of the right¹² but the violation of the right is only an irregularity which may be cured by section 537.¹³ Writing of judgment during the arguments is irregular, but curable under section 537.¹⁴

8. Citing accused's counsel as witness. — It is very reprehensible for the prosecution to call as a witness, in the course of the proceeding, a counsel who is actually defending an accused person. It not only affects the proper conduct of the defence but gives a handle to the prosecution to prevent a counsel who is acquainted with the facts of the case from conducting the defence. If the prosecution wants to call the defence counsel as a witness, sufficient notice ought to be given to the accused to enable him to engage a competent counsel.¹ Where the accused's counsel is cited as a witness, the rule as to exclusion of witnesses from the Court will not apply to him, for it would conflict with the provisions of section 340.²

It is desirable that counsel do not appear in cases where it is probable their evidence would be material.³ No self-respecting counsel would like to conduct a case for the defence after having been called as a witness for the prosecution.⁴ The real objection is not to his giving evidence (because he is a competent witness) but to his continuing as a counsel in the case in which he knows he is likely to be examined as a witness.⁵

9. Court and pleader. — A Magistrate should not conduct himself unpleasantly towards persons brought before him for trial or their legal advisers;¹ and it is highly improper for the Court or for persons in charge of the prosecution to intimidate either the accused or the pleaders appearing for them.²

A Magistrate has no right to ask a pleader to sit down in the middle of his cross-examination because he was asking irrelevant questions. He can only rule out the questions as irrelevant. He cannot refuse to allow the pleader to cross-examine witnesses or permit him to do so only on condition of his apologizing for his previous contumacious behaviour.³ It is improper to suspend a pleader before the close of a case, as grave injustice might be done to the clients by depriving them of his services.^{3a}

Advocates have ample discretion in the conduct of the case of which they are in charge and Courts cannot fetter their discretion by insisting that their case should be put to this witness or that.⁴ As a rule, the Court should leave witnesses to the pleaders to be dealt with.⁵

A pleader has a general authority to act in the interests of his client in the manner he thinks best; he cannot be charged with misconduct if he writes out petitions without asking the client and asks or advises him to present the same.⁶

As to the authority of a pleader or counsel to make admissions on behalf of his client in criminal cases, see the undermentioned decisions.^{6a}

While Judges should be careful not to offer discourtesy or insult to the professional gentlemen who appear before them, counsel should also recognize their responsibility and their duties towards the Court and to the public and should endeavour by their conduct to prevent any unpleasantness, and to avoid provoking the Court to offer discourtesy.⁷

Some latitude should be allowed to a member of the bar, insisting in the conduct of his case upon his question being taken down or his objections being noted, where the Court thinks the question inadmissible or the objections untenable. There ought to be a spirit of give and take between the Bench and the Bar in such matters.^{7a}

It is improper for one and the same counsel to appear for two accused having conflicting defences.⁸ A pleader who is himself interested in a case ought not to appear for the accused as he is prone to allow himself to be swayed by his own feelings and improperly obstruct the course of justice.⁹

It is not the duty of an advocate to approach the trial Judge and apprise him that in his opinion the man whose fate has been entrusted to his care has no defence to make. His duty is to protect his client as far as possible from being convicted except by a competent tribunal and upon legal evidence sufficient to support a conviction for the offence of which he is charged.¹⁰

10. "Pleader." — The word 'pleader' means and includes a pleader, muktear, advocate, vakil and attorney of a High Court authorized by law to practise in any Court: see S. 4 (1), clause (r). Rule 10 of the Appellate Side Rules of the Bombay High Court debars advocates who are not advocates on the original side from appearing, pleading or acting in any suit or in the High Court in any matter of ordinary original jurisdiction, civil or criminal. Hence advocates on the appellate side do not come within the definition of pleader quoad the High Court Sessions.¹

The question whether a vakil can act for a party in a criminal appeal from the original side of the High Court or whether the appearance can be only by an attorney depends upon the rules of that Court and is not concluded by anything in this Code.² A Munsif's Court pleader comes within the category of 'authorized pleader.'³ But a person who is licensed to appear only in certain districts cannot be said to be authorized to practise in a Court beyond those limits. But it is in the discretion of the Magistrate to permit him to appear for an accused person. The discretion should, however, be exercised judicially and sparingly.⁴

A Magistrate has no power to forbid a duly qualified pleader to appear.⁵ No vakalat is necessary when an authorized pleader appears in defence of an accused person either at the original trial or in an appeal. A memorandum of appearance is sufficient.⁶ Even this has been held to be unnecessary when the party also is present.⁷

District Judges have no power to forbid legal practitioners from practising pending renewal of their certificates. Any such orders must proceed from the High Court.⁸

11. Muktears and other persons. — Under the Code of 1861, an accused was entitled to be defended by a muktear¹ or authorised agent.²

The law now relative to this right is contained in S. 340 read with S. 4 (1) (r) of the Code. Every person accused before a criminal Court may of right be defended by a pleader, and "pleader" (before the amendment of 1923) included muktears and other persons, only if they had the Court's permission to appear.³ The amendment of 1923 has done away with the necessity for permission so far as muktears are concerned. As regards other persons, the provision regarding permission still holds good. An estate manager may be a pleader provided he has the permission of the Court to plead.⁴ A Prosecuting Inspector may, with the Court's permission, defend an accused person.⁵ In the undermentioned case,⁶ third class advocates in Burma would appear to have required permission to plead and act in a Sessions Court. See also Notes under section 4 (1) (r).

Though prior to the amendment muktears required the Court's permission to constitute them pleaders in a particular case, it was held that it would rarely be a wise discretion on the part of the Court to refuse permission to a muktear to appear for the defence as it would be depriving parties of legal aid which they can frequently obtain at a moderate cost.⁷

The practice of permitting private vakils to defend parties is not illegal as it is left to the discretion of the Magistrate to hear such agents or not.⁸

The discretion must be exercised in respect of each case individually and a general order prohibiting a person from appearing in any case in any Court or Courts is illegal.⁹ If a person is aggrieved by the refusal of a Magistrate to allow him to appear in a particular case he may move the High Court in revision.¹⁰ But when the case is ended, it would be useless to proceed with a revision petition in respect of the order refusing permission; the accused may, however, take it as a ground of appeal that he has been deprived of legal assistance.¹¹ accused persons and it was held that the Legislature removed, in the case of this particular class of persons, a disability which ordinarily attached to accused persons. According to another view, the new sub-section does not remove the restraint from any class of accused persons but only makes it clear that the persons mentioned therein are not really accused persons to whom the restriction against being put on oath would apply.²

Note 12

Even prior to this amendment it was held that the following persons were competent witnesses and that the restriction in clause 4 of section 342 did not apply to them :

- (1) Persons against whom an order of maintenance is sought under S. 488.³
- (2) Parties proceeded against under S. 145,⁴ and a party to proceeding under S. 138.⁵

As regards persons proceeded against under S. 488, in a case decided after the amendment, it was held that by the omission of the word "accused" in sub-section (9) of S. 488, the Legislature intended that such persons should no longer be looked upon as accused persons.⁶

1. Scope. — The provisions of this section do not apply to a person who is of unsound mind. They apply to persons who are unable to understand the proceedings from deafness or dumbness or ignorance of the language of the country or other similar cause.¹ Where the inability to understand the proceedings is due to unsoundness of mind, the procedure to be followed is that provided for in chapter XXXIV.² Where a Magistrate found an accused to be of poor wits and wanting in apprehension of the serious consequences of his acts and incapable of understanding anything, the High Court directed that the Magistrate should hold an enquiry into the question, whether the accused was a lunatic at the time of the trial or at the time he committed the act, that if he found that he was not a lunatic at either of those times, he should proceed under S. 341 and that if he convicted the accused, he should report the case to the High Court.³ The fact that the accused is deaf and dumb does not per se justify a reference under S. 341. He must also be unable to understand the proceedings.⁴

2. Duties and powers of Court other than the High Court. — If the Magistrate is of opinion that the accused cannot be made to understand the proceedings, he should nevertheless proceed with the enquiry or trial till the end and if it results in a conviction or committal, the proceedings should be forwarded to the High Court with a report as to the circumstances of the case.¹ He should not proceed to pass sentence on the accused, but having convicted him should stay proceedings and report the matter to the High Court for

The view being, that it is impossible for a deaf mute to have lived to maturity, without being able to communicate with his relatives, High Courts have insisted on Magistrates attempting to find out whether the accused (if he is deaf and dumb) has any friends or relatives, who are accustomed to communicate with him, his antecedents and ordinary mode of life, and the manner in which he was communicated with, in the ordinary affairs of life. The Magistrate should attempt to get into communication with the accused with the assistance of his relatives.⁴ The omission to attempt to communicate with the accused is clearly wrong; where there was such a failure, and the High Court was not able to say that the accused were not prejudiced, the conviction was set aside.⁵ If no failure of justice has, however, occurred the High Court may decline to interfere with the conviction.⁶

Summary procedure is not suitable to the case of accused who cannot be made to understand the proceedings.⁷

3. Proceedings shall be forwarded to the High Court. — There should be a conviction or committal before a reference is made to the High Court.¹ If a reference is made before a conviction or committal, the record will be returned to the trying Magistrate to be reported by him only if he convicts or commits the accused.²

In submitting a case to the High Court under this section, the Magistrate must state his view of the conduct of the accused in the commission of the offence, his previous history and habits. There must also be a finding whether the accused was capable of understanding and did, in fact, understand the nature of the proceedings and the purport of the evidence given by the witnesses;³ the report should also state the reason for the Magistrate's holding that the accused did not understand the proceedings, what means were used to make him understand them, and the reason why such means were unsuccessful.⁴

The proceedings to be forwarded to the High Court under this section are only those relating to an accused person who cannot be made to understand the proceedings though not insane. If in a case there are two accused and one of them though not insane is not able to understand the proceedings, the Magistrate is not to refer the proceedings of both to the High Court and the High Court under this section will have no jurisdiction to pass any order with regard to the accused who is able to understand the proceedings.⁵

3a. Non-compliance with the section — Effect. — In the undermentioned case¹ the accused, a deaf mute, unable to understand the proceedings was committed to the sessions for trial. Instead of submitting the case to the High Court under the provisions of this section, the Sessions Judge tried the case and acquitted the accused. It was held that though the Sessions Judge was wrong in proceeding to try the accused, the trial was not completely void under S. 530.

4. "High Court shall pass thereon such order as it thinks fit." — The High Court has, in a case reported under this section, full discretion to do whatever the circumstances of the case require.¹ Although the prisoner had not been able to understand the proceedings and therefore those proceedings had not, according to the principles of English common law, constituted a fair and proper trial, yet, under special circumstances, if the High Court should think fit, it might treat them as amounting to a sufficient trial and pass sentence according to the facts, which seem to be established in the course of, and as a result of those proceedings.²

The unrestricted powers vested in the High Court in dealing with cases under this section warrant its ordering that the accused be confined in a suitable place of safe custody under the orders of the Provincial Government.³ In serious cases, it is usually the practice to refer the matter to the Provincial Government.⁴ In the case of minor offences, the accused is sometimes discharged.⁵

The High Court may also cause notice of the reference to be served on the accused, so as to afford him another opportunity of being heard in the matter of the charge.⁶

When a case of a person unable to understand the proceedings is committed to the sessions and the proceedings are submitted to the High Court, the law does not contemplate that the sessions trial shall necessarily take place. It leaves it to the High Court to determine this, after considering whether any benefit will be likely to result, especially to the accused, by such trial.⁷

5. Criminal responsibility of deaf mutes. — Though great caution and diligence are necessary in the trial of a deaf mute, yet, if it be shown that such person had sufficient intelligence to understand the character of his criminal act, he is liable to be punished.¹

It was formerly presumed as a matter of law that a person born deaf and dumb was an idiot, but in modern practice want of speech and hearing does not necessarily imply mental deficiency. If the accused's mind is sound, his inability to hear and speak does not excuse him from criminal liability.²

In the undermentioned case³, the accused, who was charged with murder, was not punished as an ordinary offender, but kept in detention pending orders from the Local Government, because, in addition to being unable to understand the proceedings, he was found to have been incapable, by reason of unsoundness of mind, from knowing that he was doing wrong; and in other cases, when the accused's infirmity led to his acquittal of the offence of theft, because it was the impossibility of his being made to understand the proceedings that prevented the High Court from determining whether he knew the nature of the act committed or whether he acted with dishonest intention,⁴ the High Court declined to draw any presumption against the accused, from the recent possession by him of stolen property, because his infirmity prevented him from offering any explanation he might have for such possession.⁵

In dealing with a deaf and dumb person, it is essential for a Magistrate, before convicting him and submitting his case to the High Court, to record a finding to the effect that he had sufficient intelligence to understand the criminal character of his act.⁶

1. Legislative changes. — Under the Code of 1861, it was not incumbent on the Magistrate to examine the accused, whether before or after the close of the prosecution case.¹ It was in the discretion of the Court to do so or not.² In the Code of 1872, the discretionary nature of the examination was retained so far as enquiries and trials,

2. Scope of the section. — This section provides for the examination by the Court of accused persons, and except under the circumstances and restrictions set forth in this section, an accused person is incapable of being examined by the Court.¹

The section is based on the principle involved in the maxim audi alteram partem, namely, that no one should be condemned unheard,² and the accused should be heard, not merely on what is prima facie proved against him, but on every circumstance appearing in evidence against him.³

The section does not purport to be only in the interest of the accused; its object is to enable the accused to explain any circumstances appearing against him in the evidence; the intention of the provision is for the furtherance of justice and to enable the Court to decide the question of the guilt of the accused.⁴ The result of the examination may be beneficial to the accused but it may equally be injurious to him.⁵

The section consists of two parts, the first part giving a discretion to the Court,⁶ the second part being mandatory.⁷ At any stage of the inquiry or trial, the Court may put such questions to the accused as it considers necessary for the purpose specified in the section. After the prosecution witnesses have been examined and before the accused is called on for his defence, the Court shall question generally on the case for the said purpose.

The accused must be examined under the section whether he offers to produce defence or not. The wording of the section does not justify the interpretation that it is necessary to examine the accused under this section only if he offers to produce defence.⁸ But, it has been held by the Bombay High Court that a Court is not bound under this section to give the accused an opportunity of explaining the circumstances appearing against him in the evidence of witnesses examined on behalf of a co-accused, though the Court may give him such an opportunity.⁹

The power to question the accused, in regard to the evidence which has been given, must be distinguished from the power to record statements which the accused may offer to make; the Court can only properly question the accused under the conditions named in the section, but it may record statements offered by the accused and to such statements this section does not apply.¹⁰

It was held in the undermentioned cases¹¹ that this section and ss. 164 and 364 are not exhaustive and do not limit the generality of s. 21, Evidence Act, as to the relevancy of admissions. For a criticism of this view, see Note 2 to s. 164 and Notes under s. 533.

3. Applicability to summons cases and summary trials. —Section 342
Note 3

The High Court of Madras has held that this section does not apply to summons-cases and that consequently it is not obligatory on the Court to examine the accused, though it may be desirable to do so.¹ The ground, on which the decision proceeds, is that in summons cases there is no procedure for calling upon the accused for his defence, as in sessions cases and warrant-cases (Ss. 289, 256), but only for hearing the accused and that this section, which requires the Court to examine the accused before the accused is called on for his defence, has no application to such cases. A Full Bench of the High Court of Rangoon has also come to the same conclusion, on the additional ground that the words in S. 245, namely "if he thinks fit" give a discretion to the Court to examine the accused or not and that such discretion is incompatible with the imperative provisions of this section.² The general trend of opinion of all the other Courts is, however, that this section applies equally to summons-cases as well as to warrant-cases³ and that the words "if he thinks fit" in S. 245 have examination under the second part of the section.² The reason is that the Code intends that the accused shall be given an opportunity of explaining any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him. That must mean the whole of the evidence against him and any examination before that evidence is closed, i. e., before all the prosecution witnesses have been examined, cross-examined and re-examined, cannot possibly fulfil the conditions of the section,³ and is contrary to the law and unfair to the accused.⁴

The word "examination" includes cross-examination and re-examination and "examined" means completely examined.⁵ An examination of the accused, therefore, before the cross-examination and re-examination of the prosecution witnesses are over is not a sufficient compliance with the section.⁶ There is a conflict of opinions as to whether an accused, who has been examined once before charge is framed, should be examined a second time, when the prosecution witnesses are re-called under S. 256 and cross-examined a second time. Oudh⁹ have held that such second examination, under this section, is not necessary, the High Court of Madras proceeding on the ground that cross-examination after charge is really evidence for the defence and not for the prosecution. The Allahabad High Court is also inclined to this view.¹⁰ The High Courts of Rangoon¹¹ and Patna¹² and the Judicial Commissioner's Courts of Nagpur¹³ and Peshawar¹⁴ have, on the other hand, held that a second examination, after the cross-examination of the re-called witnesses, is necessary.

When the accused enters upon his defence, the stage at which he must be examined passes. It is no compliance with the section if the examination takes place at a later stage.¹⁵ This section has, therefore, no application and no fresh examination of the accused is necessary where, for example, a prosecution witness is re-called under section 257 (after the accused has entered on his defence) and cross-examined,¹⁶ or where additional evidence is taken or ordered to be taken by the appellate Court under S. 428,¹⁷ or where a court-witness is examined under S. 540 (see S. 540 Note 16), or where witnesses are re-called under S. 231 on an altered charge, after the accused has been called on for

10. Examination after framing charge. — Provided the accused is examined after the prosecution evidence is completely closed, it makes no difference whether the examination takes place before or after the charge is framed.¹ Where witnesses are examined after charge, the accused must be questioned, under this section, after the close of such examination.²

11. "Evidence," meaning of. — The word "evidence" in this section means evidence already given at the inquiry or trial at the time of the examination.¹

12. Examination must be by the Court itself and not by others. — The Court alone is authorized to examine the accused person and the counsel for the complainant or the prosecution should not be allowed to take part in the examination.¹ It is improper for a Magistrate to base his examination on detailed instructions given by the counsel for the prosecution.²

13. De novo trial — Examination by successor. — Where the Magistrate trying the case is transferred and his successor begins the trial once again, he should examine the accused once again under this section and cannot rest satisfied with the examination held by his predecessor.¹ The High Court of Madras has held that a failure to examine the accused, where no new matter has been introduced in the de novo trial, does not vitiate the proceedings.²

14. Nature of examination contemplated by the section. —

An accused person can be questioned under this section only "for the purpose of enabling the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him."¹ The real object of the section is to enable the Judge to ascertain from the accused such explanation as he may desire to give, regarding any statements made by the prosecution witnesses or to elicit from the accused how he proposes to meet such evidence as, in the opinion of the Court, implicates him.² It follows that the section has no application where no evidence at all has been recorded on behalf of the prosecution,³ or where no evidence implicating the accused has been given.⁴ The reason is that no explanation from the accused is necessary in such cases. The section has also no application where the purpose of the examination is something different from that specified in the section. Thus, an examination cannot be made of the accused for the purpose of getting from the accused the names of his witnesses, the nature of his evidence and the particulars of his defence.⁵ The examination contemplated is a gap⁸ in the case for the prosecution. The Magistrate or Judge cannot thus ask the accused under this section about his previous convictions.⁹

The section is designed to secure that the Court, by the frame of its questions, performs a double duty, viz. —

(a) communicates to the accused to the full extent that may be necessary in each particular case, what is alleged against him in the prosecution evidence, and

(b) ascertains from him what explanation or defence he wishes to put forward in respect thereof.¹⁰

15. "Question him generally on the case." — As has been seen already in Note 2, it is imperative that the Court should question the accused generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence. There is a difference of opinion among the High Courts as to what is meant by questioning "generally on the case." According to one view, the word "generally" does not limit the nature of the questioning to one or more questions of a general nature relating to the case but means that the questions should relate to the whole case and should not be limited to particular part or parts of it; the law, therefore, intends that the salient points appearing in the evidence against the accused must be pointed out to him in a succinct form and he should be asked to explain them, if he wishes to do so.¹ It may be that when a general case.⁵ According to another view, a general question, "you have heard the evidence; what is your defence," or "have you anything to say" is a sufficient compliance with the section.⁶ It was held in the under-mentioned case⁷ that, according to the practice prevailing in the province of Madras, putting specific questions was not necessary but a general question was enough. In Kallam Narayana v. Emperor,⁸ Mr. Justice Reilly observed as follows:

"It is a very difficult duty and a duty which has to be performed with the greatest caution so that without the slightest flavour of cross-examination, without asking anything which may lead the accused to incriminate himself, the important points against him may be brought to his notice and he may have an opportunity of explaining them. The task is such a difficult one that, when the accused is represented by counsel, it is often in his interest that the Judge should formally comply with the section by asking a general question and then leave the accused's counsel to offer explanations on his behalf in the way most favourable and least dangerous to him."

According to a third view, the question as to what must be the nature of the questions to be put depends upon the circumstances of each case; it would however be a sufficient compliance with the section if the accused is given an opportunity of explaining the circumstances appearing against him; it is neither necessary nor desirable to examine the accused in detail so as to enable the prosecution to take advantage thereof.⁹

In Dwarkanath Varma v. Emperor,¹⁰ Lord Atkin observed as follows:

"The other question is a general question whether there was anything else he desired to say about the charges or the evidence. The learned Chief Justice told the jury that the absence of blood in the body cavity was a vital point. If so, it is plain that under S. 342 of the Code, it was the duty of the examining Judge to call the accused's attention to this point and ask for an explanation."

The first of the three views set out above must, in the light of the Privy Council decision, be accepted as correct. After the above Privy Council decision, the Madras High Court adopted this view in the cases cited below.¹¹ But in a later decision,¹² the Privy Council decision was distinguished and it was held that where the accused has shown by his replies that he has understood all the points against him and has attempted to explain them, the failure of the Judge to put to him all the items of evidence leading to the inference of his guilt is not material.

A long composite question should not be asked, but separate questions on the various points should be put and the explanation of the accused asked.¹³

16. "Without previously warning the accused." — The section does not require, as in the case of statements taken under s. 164, that the accused shall be warned of the consequences of the statements he makes. It has, however, been held in the undermentioned case¹ that it is extremely desirable that the Magistrate should follow the practice in England and warn the accused that they are not obliged to answer unless they desire to do so.

17. Examination of pleader of accused. — There is a conflict of opinions as to whether this section enables the Court to examine the pleader of the accused in cases where the personal attendance of the accused has been dispensed with under s. 205. According to the High Courts of Allahabad,¹ Calcutta² and Madras³ the examination must be of the accused in person, who should be directed under sub-s.(2) of s. 205 to be present for the purpose. The High Courts of Bombay⁴ and Rangoon⁵ and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind⁶ have, on the other hand, held that the Magistrate is not bound to examine the accused personally in such cases.

18. Written statement of accused, if sufficient. — Under the Code of 1861, where the examination of the accused was in the discretion of the Court, it was held that where a written defence was given, it was not necessary for the Magistrate to examine the accused orally.¹ The latter part of the present section is, however, as has been seen already, mandatory, and the accused is not entitled, as of right, to put in a written statement in lieu of answers which he may give to questions put to him under this section.² It has been generally held that this section contemplates an oral examination,³ that a written statement of defence cannot be allowed to take the place of the examination, which this section imperatively orders the Court to make,⁴ and that the practice of taking such statements is pernicious⁵ and entirely irresponsible.⁶ A written statement drafted by the accused's legal adviser, for instance, can never have the same value as answers coming directly from the accused's mouth.⁷ In the undermentioned cases,⁸ however, it was held that the filing of a written statement of defence dispensed with the necessity to examine the accused orally under this section. It is submitted that this view is not correct and is against the general trend of opinion.

The immunity under sub-s.(2) of the section does not extend to a written statement filed by the accused. See also Note 12 under S. 256.

19. Examination by committing Magistrate.—A committing Magistrate is bound, before commitment, to examine the accused, as required by this section. The words, "and he has (if necessary) examined the accused" in S. 209 of the Code cannot be taken as giving a discretion to the Magistrate, who intends to commit, to examine the accused.¹ The Calcutta High Court, however, has in the undermentioned case,^{1a} held that the mandatory provisions of this section apply only to the Sessions Court in such cases, as it is in that Court that the accused is called on for his defence. A similar view has also been taken by the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind.² See also section 287 and Notes thereon.

20. Examination of accused in sessions trials.—The section is a general provision applicable to trials in all cases including sessions cases, and even where the accused has been examined generally by the committing Magistrate, the Sessions Judge is bound to examine the accused in the trial.¹ It makes a considerable difference to listeners, like the jury, whether a statement before the Magistrate is read out in Court, or whether an accused person is carefully examined in the presence of the jury and his answers and demeanour noted by the jury.²

A contrary view has, however, been taken in the undermentioned case,³ based upon the interpretation of the words, "if any" used in S. 289 of the Code. It is submitted that this view is not correct. The words, "if any" in S. 289 should not be construed as conflicting with this section. Section 289 must be taken to contemplate the case in which there are no circumstances for the accused to explain.⁴ See also section 289 Note 3.

21. Refusal to answer—Sub-section (2).—An accused person is entitled to refuse to answer questions put to him under this section,¹ and when he does so, the Court is not bound to go on questioning him.² Nor should the Court hold inquisitorial proceedings against him in such a case.³

Where an accused declines to answer questions put to him under this section, the fact should be noted on the record.⁴

Although an accused is entitled to refuse to answer, such refusal may often be attended with great risk to him, inasmuch as the Court and the jury, if any, may draw such inference against him from such refusal as it thinks just.⁵ An innocent man cannot well injure himself by a truthful explanation of the circumstances appearing against him.^{5a}

An accused person does not render himself liable to punishment by refusing to answer questions put to him.⁶

As to whether an accused person can refuse to sign the record of his examination under S. 364, and the effect of such refusal, see S. 364, Note 10.

The fact that the accused declines to make a statement will not necessarily indicate that he would not like to answer specific questions.⁷

22. Giving false answers — Sub-section (2). — An accused person does not, by giving false answers to the questions put to him under this section, render himself liable to punishment. The resort to a false defence will, however, affect the credit to be attached to the case of the accused and raise an inference against him, though this will not relieve the Court from the task of attempting to arrive at a sound conclusion from the whole evidence, inasmuch as, notwithstanding his false defence, the accused may be innocent of the offence charged.¹

23. Answers given to be taken into consideration. — Where facts are put forward on behalf of the prosecution, which, unless explained, justify an inference of guilt being drawn against the accused, it is both lawful and proper for the Court to consider the explanation of those facts, which the accused puts forward in his defence.¹ In cases of circumstantial evidence, the Court should always take the explanation of the accused into consideration.² The burden of proving an exception under the Penal Code is on the accused³ and in such cases, the circumstances, with his statement, may be sufficient to establish the exception in his favour.⁴

The proof of a case against the accused must depend, not on the absence of an explanation on his part, but upon the positive affirmative evidence of his guilt given by the prosecution.⁵ Where, however, the prosecution evidence prima facie establishes his guilt or involves him in considerable suspicion, his absence of explanation may give rise to an inference against him.⁶ But when the prosecution evidence is entirely untrustworthy, it is not open to the Court to rely upon the admissions of the accused made in a statement under this section and to base a conviction thereon.^{6a}

The answers given can only be "taken into consideration" in the inquiry or trial, in which they are given. They cannot be allowed to fill up a gap in the prosecution evidence; the prosecution must make out its case by evidence.⁷ Thus, where in a prosecution for defamation, no evidence was let in to prove publication, it was held that the admission of publication, made by the accused in his statement under this section, was not sufficient to fill up the gap in the prosecution evidence.⁸ Similarly, in a prosecution for murder, where the prosecution evidence is not sufficient to connect the accused with the murder, the gap cannot be filled up by an admission made by the accused in his examination under this section.^{8a} The Lahore High Court has in the undermentioned case^{8b} expressed a doubt whether the same principle would apply to a written statement lodged by the accused of his own accord.

Where the answers given satisfactorily explain the prosecution evidence, there can be no conviction; if they do not rebut the prosecution evidence, the Court will convict; but in any case the Court cannot

Notes 25-27

25. Answers making defamatory statements. — It has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad¹ and Madras² that a defamatory statement, made in answer to questions put by the Court under this section, will not render the accused liable to punishment. The High Court of Bombay has, on the other hand, held that he will render himself liable.³

26. Answers amounting to contempt of Court. — A statement, which amounts to contempt of Court, will render the accused liable to punishment.¹

27. Answers by one accused, if can be considered against co-accused. — It has already been seen that the answers given by the accused can be used only for or against him and not against others. There is no indication in the language of this section that the answers given by one accused under this section could be considered against his co-accused. On the question whether statements made under this section can be taken into consideration under S. 30, Evidence Act, against a co-accused, there is a divergence of judicial opinion. The Bombay High Court has held that for the purposes of S. 30, there is no distinction between a confession made by an accused before the trial and one made by him in the course of the trial and hence, a confession made by one accused in the course of his statement under this section can be taken into consideration against his co-accused under S. 30 of the Evidence Act.¹ The Lahore High Court agrees with this view.² But the Allahabad,³ Madras,⁴ Calcutta⁵ and Nagpur⁶ High Courts have taken a contrary view on the ground that S. 30 of the Evidence Act refers only to a confession made before the trial and not in the course of the trial. It is submitted that the latter view is correct. The reason is this: S. 30 of the Evidence Act requires that the confession must be "proved" before the Court. Under S. 3 of the Evidence Act, a fact is said to be proved when on considering the matters before it the Court believes such fact to exist or considers its existence so probable that a prudent man ought under the circumstances of the case to act upon the supposition that it exists. When a confession is made before a Court in the course of a trial, the Court perceives with its own senses the fact of the confession and knows such fact; the Court does not believe it or consider it to be probable.

28. Several accused — Each to be examined separately. — Where there are several accused in a case, it is incumbent on the Magistrate to examine each of them separately; a joint statement of all the accused in a single paragraph is not authorized by the section.¹ Where, after the Judge took an explanation from one of the accused persons, as regards the nature of his defence, and subsequently took another statement from a co-accused under this section, it was held that he was entitled to do so.²

Where there are several accused, the case of each of them should be individually considered and each of them should be questioned with reference to the particular position brought out by the evidence against him.³

29. Accused's defence in general. — The nature of the defence should be ascertained, not only from the statement of the accused but from the trend of the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses, and from the arguments of the accused's pleader at the close of the trial.¹

An accused person is entitled to put forward any defence open to him, technical or otherwise, and to have the Court's judgment on it.² Nor is there anything in law to prevent him from setting up alternative and inconsistent defences,³ though such defence may ordinarily weaken his case.⁴ It is open to an accused person to plead the right of private defence, either specifically, or in the alternative.^{4a}

It is not the affair of the defence to explain or to supply gaps in the prosecution evidence.⁵ Nor can the Court call upon the accused to frame a theory, particularly in a case of difficulty, in which the theory of the prosecution is itself not clear.^{5a} Where, however, a prima facie case is made out by the prosecution, it is the duty of the defence to rebut the presumption arising therefrom, by some tangible evidence.⁶

An accused can make admissions of facts at his trial, which may relieve the prosecution from bringing evidence to prove such admitted facts: a plea of guilty is an extreme instance of such an admission and

30. Court, if can ask accused to give thumb impressions. — Section 73 of the Evidence Act provides that the Court may direct any person present in Court to write any words or figures or to give his thumb impressions. Section 5 of the Identification of Prisoners' Act, XXXIII of 1920, also enables the Court to direct the measurements (which include thumb impressions) of any person to be taken for the purpose of any proceeding under the Code. It was held in the undermentioned cases¹ that the taking of thumb impressions of accused persons is in the nature of questioning the accused for the purpose of eliciting incriminating statements from them, and that it is, therefore, prohibited by this section. These decisions have not been followed by later decisions of the same Courts on the ground that s. 342 applies only to oral statements and has no application to the taking of thumb impressions and signatures.²

Where the accused refused to give his handwriting in a forgery case against him, it was held that an adverse inference can be drawn against him by reason of such refusal.³

where an accused person is pardoned under S. 337,⁹ or is discharged,¹⁰ he ceases to be an accused. Where several persons were arrested in the course of a police investigation and the police discharged one of them and made him a witness in the trial started against the others, it was held that he was a competent witness, even though his discharge by the police was illegal.¹¹ So also, where several accused were charge-sheeted by the police but subsequently one of them was placed on a separate charge-sheet and tried separately, it was held that he was not an accused for the purposes of the trial of the other accused and was a competent witness against them.^{11a} It has also been held that where the police refrain from prosecuting a person against whom there is adequate evidence to justify his production for inquiry and trial before a Magistrate, he can be a competent witness even though he was not pardoned under S. 337.^{11b} Where A and B are charged with theft but process is issued by the Magistrate only against A, B is a competent witness in the trial against A.¹² An accused person, who has not been legally granted a pardon,¹³ or who has not been legally discharged by the Magistrate,^{13a} does not cease to be an accused person. A pardon granted by the Government to an accused after the commencement of the trial is not one under S. 337 and he does not cease to be an "accused" person. His evidence is, therefore, not admissible against his co-accused.^{13b}

Where an accused person is convicted, he ceases to be an accused person.¹⁴ Where, therefore, one of several co-accused is convicted on his plea of guilty, he becomes a competent witness against others who were originally jointly put up for trial with him.¹⁵ It was also held in the undermentioned case^{15a} that where an accused person pleads guilty, his incompetency of being a witness is removed, though he is convicted on such plea some time later. Where a prosecution is withdrawn against one of several accused under S. 494, he ceases to be an accused person and is a competent witness, to whom an oath can be administered, in further proceedings against others.¹⁶

A criminal appeal is a continuation of the criminal case and the appellant has the privilege of the accused and cannot be administered an oath.¹⁷

A Magistrate should not put persons on oath unless he is satisfied of his authority to do so. Where he examines persons, against whom a complaint is laid, before issue of process, the procedure is irregular and illegal.¹⁸

Section 10 of the Bombay Gambling Act, 1887, empowers the Magistrate to examine as witnesses, any of the persons arrested and brought before him in accordance with S. 6 (b) thereof. This procedure is a special procedure which overrides the general law enacted in this section.¹⁹ A contrary view was, however, expressed in the undermentioned case.²⁰

In the undermentioned case²¹ it was held that a proceeding for the forfeiture of recognizances is in the nature of a civil proceeding, and that the person proceeded against can give evidence on oath on his own behalf.

See also section 539A Note 5.

32. Examination of accused in cross-case as a witness. — Where there is a case and a counter or cross-case, both pending, it was held in the undermentioned cases¹ that the examination of the accused in the one case, as witness in the other, constituted a grave irregularity, as it was impossible to assume in such a case that the evidence, so given, could be impartial. This view, it is submitted, cannot be accepted as correct, if it means that such examination is not authorised by the law. The said view has not been followed in later cases.² In any case, if the accused is not prejudiced by the course adopted, it will not vitiate the trial.³ See also the undermentioned cases.⁴

32a. Applicability of section to proceedings under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act. — The High Court of Madras has held that a pleader, against whom proceedings are taken under s. 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act, is an accused person and he cannot be solemnly affirmed.¹ The High Court of Calcutta has, in the undermentioned case,² taken a contrary view.

32b. Applicability to proceedings under section 145. — None of the parties litigating under s. 145 can be called an accused person, and therefore they can be examined as witnesses in the case.¹

33. Examination of accused — How recorded. — See Section 364.

observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in *Subramania Ayyar v. King-Emperor*² to the following effect :

"Their Lordships are unable to regard the disobedience to an express provision as to a mode of trial as a mere irregularity. Such a phrase, as irregularity, is not appropriate to the illegality of trying an accused person for many different offences at the same time and those offences being spread over a longer period than by law could have been joined together in one indictment."

In the undermentioned cases,³ a contrary view has been expressed, namely, that a non-compliance with the section does not vitiate the trial unless the accused has been prejudiced by the procedure adopted.

Note 35

In Abdul Rahman v. King-Emperor,⁴ which was a case arising under s. 360 of the Code, their Lordships of the Privy Council distinguished Subramania Ayyar's case on the ground that in that case the procedure adopted was one which the Code positively prohibited, and held that an omission or irregularity in the case of other provisions of the Code, unaccompanied by any probable suggestion of any failure of justice having been thereby occasioned, is not enough to warrant the quashing of a conviction. It is submitted that unless the provisions of this section are construed as conveying a positive prohibition, the cases holding that a non-compliance ipso facto vitiates conviction require re-consideration.

Where the non-compliance with the section is held to vitiate the trial whether by reason of prejudice to the accused, or independently of any prejudice, ordinarily the proper course is to order a re-trial from the stage at which the provisions of this section were not complied with.⁵ In other words, the matter should be set right by again questioning the accused as required by this section and then by calling on him to enter on his defence.⁶ The Court remanding the case should not keep the case on its own file and simply call for a re-submission, after taking the necessary examination; it should remand the whole case to be tried on the merits, as if it were before the Court for the first time.⁷ But where the case is a petty one,⁸ or the offence is merely technical,⁹ it has been held that it is not in the interest of justice that the case should be tried de novo and that the accused should be acquitted.

evidence is taken after the examination of the accused, and the latter is not examined again under this section,¹¹ the answers given in the one case and the further evidence taken in the other should be rejected and not taken into account. It will not be proper for the Judge to take into consideration circumstances appearing in the prosecution evidence against the accused, if he had not drawn his attention to them in his examination and called for an explanation.¹² In cases where the evidence against the accused is entirely circumstantial, unless the Magistrate has elicited from the accused any explanation he has to give in respect of the facts appearing in evidence against him, the trial will be vitiated and conviction based on such evidence cannot be sustained.¹³

An objection, on the ground of the failure to comply with the provisions of this section, raises a point of law and can be taken at the hearing of an application for revision, although it was not urged in the Courts below and is not set forth in the application.¹⁴ But in revision proceedings, the High Court is not bound to interfere, even if the non-compliance with S. 342 is held to be illegal.¹⁵

Where a Magistrate examines an accused person before any evidence has been recorded, it has been held that such statements cannot be rejected as inadmissible on account of the irregularity in procedure and that they may be evidence, as being admissions under S. 21 of the Evidence Act.¹⁶

1. Scope of the section. — Section 163 is an analogous provision applicable where an investigation is proceeding under chapter XIV. This section applies to accused persons and during the stage of inquiries and trials.¹ The words “accused person” have the same meaning as the word “accused” in S. 342² and unless influence is used to a person who is an “accused” within the meaning of that section, this section does not apply.³ Thus, it does not apply where an inducement is offered to a witness and not to an accused person then under bail.⁴ See Note 31 to section 342 as to the meaning of “accused person.”

2. “Except as provided in sections 337 and 338.” — Sections 337 and 338 provide for the grant of pardon to accused persons. Except under those sections, no inducement can be offered to an accused person to make any disclosures. Thus, a conditional pardon cannot be tendered by any authority save as provided by Ss. 337 and 338.¹

Where the pardon tendered turns out to be illegal under S. 337, it would be unlawful to examine the accused as a witness and his statement would be irrelevant and inadmissible in evidence.²

3. No influence, etc. — An accused person is neither bound nor is under an obligation to make any admission injurious to his own interests. No judicial officer should attempt to compel him to make any such admission.¹ Where, however, the accused wishes to make a statement of his own accord, it is not necessary that the Magistrate should give him any caution before taking his statement.² The eliciting of an admission by putting words into the mouth of the accused is unfair.³

Section 343,
Notes 3-4

An accused person is not bound to produce his co-accused who are absconding and the Court cannot exercise any pressure upon him for the purpose of producing them.⁴

An assurance of amnesty given to a witness is not within the mischief of the section, and does not affect the competency of the witness, though it may affect his credibility.⁵

4. Evidentiary value of statements. — See also Note 6 to S.163. This section does not declare what the consequences would be if an accused person did make a statement under inducement.¹ It seems to be, however, clear that the statements so made would be inadmissible in evidence.

344.* (1) If, from the absence of a witness, or any other reasonable cause, it becomes necessary or advisable to postpone the commencement of, or adjourn any inquiry or trial, the Court may, if it thinks fit, by order in writing, stating the reasons therefor, from time to time, postpone or adjourn the same on such terms as it thinks fit, for such time as it considers reasonable, and may by a warrant remand the accused if in custody :

Provided that no Magistrate shall remand an accused person to custody under this section for a term exceeding fifteen days at a time.

(2) Every order made under this section by a Court other than a High Court shall be in writing signed by the presiding Judge or Magistrate.

Explanation. — If sufficient evidence has been obtained to raise a suspicion that the accused may have committed an offence, and it appears likely that further evidence may be obtained by a remand, this is a reasonable cause for a remand.

1. Legislative changes. — There was no separate chapter in the Codes of 1861 and 1872 dealing with the general provisions applicable to all kinds of trials. Hence a provision of adjournment was made under each chapter relating to different proceedings such as preliminary inquiry by Magistrates, trial of warrant-cases, of summons-cases and sessions trials. When the 1882 Code was passed, re-casting in many respects the two former Codes, some of the general provisions applicable to all kinds of trials were clubbed together in chapter XXIV and the Court's power to adjourn and remand was provided for in S. 344. The section as re-enacted provided also for the postponement of the commencement of an inquiry or trial for which there was no provision in the Codes of 1861 and 1872. In the present Code the words "if it thinks fit" in sub-section (1) were inserted between the words "the Court may" and "by order in writing," etc.

2. Scope and applicability of the section. — This section provides for the postponement of the commencement or the adjournment of any inquiry or trial, and also for remand of the accused where such postponement or adjournment is made. Thus, after a Magistrate has taken cognizance of an offence, his powers of postponement and adjournment are regulated by this section.¹

The policy of law is that criminal cases should be disposed of with the least possible delay.² The object is to avoid hardship to the parties and witnesses.³ If the accused is in custody, frequent adjournments will be a harassment to him and, from the point of view of the prosecution, time will efface recollection of facts. The longer the period allowed to elapse from the time of the arrest to the time the witnesses give evidence, the greater is the probability of confusion and of the truth being obscured.⁴ The section consequently provides that a postponement or adjournment can be given only in two cases —

- (1) where witnesses are absent, or
- (2) for any other reasonable cause.^{1a}

It is not expedient for a sessions trial to be adjourned. When once begun, such trial should be continued de die in diem — from day to day — until it is finished.⁵ The section applies only to proceedings in inquiries and trials. It does not apply to appeals,⁶ or to proceedings in revision.⁷

As to other provisions relating to adjournment, see sections 229, 508 and 526.

3. Postponement and adjournment. — The section empowers the Court not only to adjourn an enquiry or trial, but to postpone its commencement. Thus, a Magistrate receiving a complaint may postpone the issue of a process under S. 204, and is not bound to pass any order under S. 202, S. 203 or S. 204 immediately after examining the complainant.¹

In the undermentioned case,² the Bombay High Court pointed out the desirability of having a fixed time each day for the purpose of appointing new dates for cases which cannot be reached on that day.

4. Postponement of case sine die. — A postponement or adjournment of a case sine die is not in accordance with this or any other provision of the Code.¹ The postponement or adjournment under this section can only be "from time to time" and for such time as the Court considers reasonable, i. e., for fixed and definite periods.² See also Note 11.

5. Inquiry or trial. — See Section 4 (1), clause (k).

5a. Adjournment by public proclamation. — An adjournment must, under this section, be by an order in writing. It is irregular and objectionable to adjourn a trial by public proclamation.¹

6. "May, if it thinks fit." — These words show that the question of postponement or adjournment of an enquiry or trial is a matter of the Court's discretion. The discretion is, however, not an arbitrary one but should be exercised judiciously and only in cases which come within the terms of the section.¹

A Court is not obliged to pay attention to a telegram from a pleader of one of the parties asking for adjournment.²

7. Reasonable cause for adjournment. — An adjournment can be granted only on the ground of the absence of a witness^{1a} or for any other reasonable cause.^{1b} As a general rule Magistrates should refrain from granting adjournments save in cases where they are clearly necessitated for the purposes of justice.¹

The following have been held to be good grounds for adjournment:

- (1) To enable the accused to secure the attendance of his witnesses.²
- (2) To enable an accused to examine such of his witnesses as he has produced.³
- (3) To enable an accused to engage the services of a pleader to properly defend himself in complicated cases.⁴
- (4) Where the accused's advocate is absent at another place to fulfill a long-standing engagement.⁵
- (5) Where a large number of witnesses have been examined for the prosecution and the accused wants two days' time to consider what evidence he should produce.⁶

- (2) The absence of a co-accused and desirability of a joint trial.¹³
- (3) To enable the complainant to examine witnesses whom he had not cared to have in attendance.¹⁴

8. "Stating the reasons therefor." — The reasons for the adjournment should be clearly expressed on record. It is not enough that a reasonable cause exists. Such cause should be stated in the order as the prisoner is entitled to know what such cause is, and an appellate Court cannot form an opinion of its reasonableness unless it is stated on record.¹

9. Adjournment to and trial on holiday. — A trial of an accused person on a Sunday or other holiday would not necessarily make the proceedings illegal or invalid.¹ Where, however, the result of taking the unusual procedure of trying the case on a holiday is to cause prejudice to the accused, as for example, by preventing him from engaging a pleader to defend him, the conviction will be set aside.²

10. Advancement of hearing. — This section does not stand in the way of the Court advancing the hearing of a case to an earlier date, provided due notice thereof is given to the parties.¹ An acceleration of the date of hearing against the wishes of the accused or his pleader is not proper.²

period (see Note 4 above). But every Court has an inherent power to stay a case pending on its file where it is necessary for the ends of justice to do so.¹ The power of the High Court in this respect is expressly recognized by S. 561A of the Code.² The High Court had also, independent of S. 561A, power under S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, to stay proceedings in subordinate Courts in the exercise of its powers of superintendence over inferior Courts.³ But under S. 224 of the Government of India Act, 1935, which corresponds to S. 107 of the Act of 1915, the High Court has now no power to interfere with the judicial orders of the lower Courts: see sub-s.(2) of S. 224 and the undermentioned cases.^{3a} be exercised having regard to the merits and all the circumstances of the case.⁵ The real principle to be looked to is whether the accused is likely to be prejudiced if the criminal proceeding is not stayed until the disposal of the suit.⁶ Where the matter in issue is not of such a complicated kind for the decision of which Civil Courts are preferred as peculiarly qualified as, for example, the genuineness of a will or other document, the validity of a will, and the bona fides of a civil claim, it cannot be assumed that there will be a manifest and irreparable injustice done in the Criminal Court when the integrity of the Court is not questioned.⁷

In exercising the discretion in the matter of stay, the following principles may be remembered:

Section 344.
Note 11

- (1) Where a criminal proceeding is instituted with the motive of hampering the conduct of the civil proceeding, the former may be ordered to be stayed.⁸ This, however, will not apply in the case of public prosecutions, such as prosecutions under S. 195 or S. 476, Criminal Procedure Code.⁹
- (2) Where a civil proceeding is filed for the purpose of delaying or the conduct of which would result in a long delay of the trial of the criminal case, no stay should be granted.¹⁰
- (3) Where the civil suit has been filed before the institution of the criminal proceeding and it appears that the decision in the former will be of value in arriving at the truth in the criminal case, the latter may be stayed.¹¹

- (4) Where the civil suit is filed after the criminal case and there is no possibility of its being decided soon, a stay should not be ordinarily granted.¹²
- (5) Where the criminal prosecution in no way arises out of the civil suit and the decision in the Civil Court will not necessarily affect the decision of the Criminal Court, it will be unreasonable and speculative to order stay of proceeding in the Criminal Court.^{12a}
- (6) Where the subject-matters of the dispute in the criminal and civil cases are not identical or have no bearing on one another, a stay will not be granted.¹³
- (7) In cases of disputed title to land where it is difficult to draw the line between a bona fide claim and a criminal trespass, a stay can be granted.¹⁴
- (8) Although it is not illegal to have two separate criminal proceedings in respect of accusations arising out of the same facts, such a course is obviously inconvenient and it is desirable that both the proceedings should be held in a Court having jurisdiction to conduct both.^{14a} See also Note 12 and section 190 Note 17.

A Magistrate who has directed an inquiry by a subordinate Magistrate under S. 202, can stay proceedings,¹⁷ and where there are two counter-complaints the Magistrate will be justified in staying proceedings in one pending the disposal of the other.¹⁸ See also Note 12 and the undermentioned case.¹⁹

12. Adjournment of one of two cross-cases. — Where there is a case and a counter-case, and the Court decides not to try them simultaneously, but one after the other, it has power under this section to adjourn the one and take up the other for trial.¹ As to whether a simultaneous trial can be held of two cross-cases, see S. 239 and the undermentioned cases.²

13. Power of High Court to set aside order of adjournment. — An improper order of adjournment can be set aside by the High Court in revision.¹ Ordinarily, however, where the Court has exercised a judicial discretion in the matter, the High Court will not interfere.²

15. "On such terms as it thinks fit" — Costs. — These words empower the Court postponing or adjourning a criminal case to impose such terms as it thinks fit. This will include an order for the payment of costs,¹ though such an order will be made only where the circumstances are exceptional and where, for some reason or other, the ordinary everyday method of conducting criminal cases has to be departed from owing to the conduct of a party.^{1a} Thus, a complainant who is solely to blame for an adjournment can be ordered to pay costs.² Similarly, an informant to the police in a police case who, though a witness, is virtually conducting the prosecution by engaging a vakil and who asks for time, may be ordered to pay costs as a condition of the adjournment.³ So also an accused person can be ordered to pay costs as a condition of an adjournment.⁴ But this power should not be exercised in such a manner as to place obstacles in the way of the accused properly defending himself.^{4a} But where in a police case the Police Sub-Inspector was responsible for securing the attendance of absent witnesses, the complainant was held not to be liable for costs.⁵ Nor will the complainant be liable for costs when an adjournment becomes necessary owing to the absence of the accused⁶ or even where he is himself absent when the case is a non-compoundable warrant-case and his position after charge is reduced to that of a witness.⁷ In the undermentioned case,^{7a} where only some of the accused persons attended, and it was found that the complainant had not accompanied the process-server, the Magistrate ordered the complainant to pay the costs of the accused persons who were present. It was held by the High Court in revision that the order for costs was not a proper one.

Where the accused is absent, and the case has perforce to be adjourned, no costs can be ordered against him.⁸

Notes 15-16

The power to order costs does not extend to previous adjournments granted without conditions.⁹

No costs of adjournment can be awarded in criminal appeals¹⁰ or criminal revisions¹¹ as the section does not apply to such proceedings.

15a. Adjournment for cross-examination of prosecution witnesses in trials of warrant-cases — Power to impose terms on accused. — In trials of warrant-cases, the accused has a statutory right to the re-call of prosecution witnesses for cross-examination after the charge is framed and he cannot be ordered to pay the expenses of the witnesses in such cases. See Notes under S. 256. But this right applies only to the first re-call of the witnesses. Where once the witnesses are re-called but the accused asks for an adjournment of the case on the ground of the absence of his pleader, the Court can, under this section, grant him the adjournment on condition of his paying bhatta to the prosecution witnesses.¹

16. Remand. — A remand is a re-committal to custody of a person who has been brought up in custody.¹ The scheme of the Code as to the detention of the accused persons in custody is as follows —

A person arrested without warrant should be brought before a Magistrate without unnecessary delay (Ss. 59 and 60), the maximum period of police custody allowed being twenty-four hours (S. 61). A person arrested under a warrant is similarly to be brought before a Magistrate without unnecessary delay (S. 81). On the arrested person being so brought before the Magistrate, the Magistrate may, from time to time, authorize the detention of the accused either in police custody or in the judicial lock-up, as he thinks fit, for a term not exceeding fifteen days on the whole (S. 167). If within that period the investigation shows that there is not sufficient evidence or reasonable ground of suspicion against the accused, he should be released by the investigating officer on taking security for appearance before the Magistrate if and when he is required (S. 169). If within that period the investigation shows that there is such evidence or if the period expires without the investigation having been completed, the accused must be forwarded, subject to the provisions as to bail, to the Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of the offence upon a police-report (S. 170). If the latter also receives along with the accused a police-report under S. 173, he can take cognizance of the offence on such report and if necessary remand the accused to custody for fifteen days at a time for the purpose of obtaining further evidence or for other reasonable cause (S. 311). If owing to the investigation not having been completed a final report is not sent with the accused under S. 173, the Magistrate should release the accused. He cannot order a remand in such a case.² The High Court of Allahabad has, however, in the undermentioned case,³ held that S. 170 applies only to cases where the investigation has not been completed and further, that even where the accused is sent up under that section without any report under S. 173, the Magistrate can order a remand of the accused under this section and is not bound to release him. It is submitted that this view cannot be accepted as correct. This section clearly applies only where the Magistrate has taken cognizance of the offence and this he could do only on a police-report or in the other modes referred to in S. 190. In the absence, therefore, of a police-report or the other things referred to in S. 190 the Magistrate could not act, and there being no subsisting order for detention, the accused must be released.

17. Distinction between detention under section 167 and under section 344.

- (1) Section 167 applies to detention of accused persons during police investigation. This section applies to detention after police investigation and before or pending inquiry or trial.¹ Thus, where a Magistrate, having ordered the accused to be detained for a period of less than fifteen days, thinks no further detention is necessary and sends him to a Magistrate having jurisdiction, a remand by the latter Magistrate will be one under this section and not under section 167.^{1a}
- (2) The maximum period of detention under S. 167 can be only fifteen days. The period of detention under this section cannot exceed fifteen days at a time though the sum total of the periods of detention may exceed fifteen days.²

(3) A detention under section 167 may be either in police custody or in judicial lock-up. A detention under this section can only be in a judicial lock-up.³

(4) A Magistrate acting under S. 167 need not be one who has jurisdiction to try or commit the case. A Magistrate acting under this section must, however, be one who has such jurisdiction.⁴

See also Note 7 to section 167.

18. Grounds of remand. — The words “may by a warrant remand” show that the Magistrate has a discretion in the matter of granting a remand.¹ The discretion, must, however, be a judicial one to be exercised in accordance with legal principles. The detention of an accused is not intended to be penal: its object is only to secure the attendance of the accused at the trial.² The Magistrate cannot, when an accused is brought before him in custody, further detain him in custody by remand without some reason made manifest to him either in the shape of sworn testimony given before him, or in some other form which can be put upon the record and which is sufficient to justify him in sending the prisoner to prison, there to be detained for a period not exceeding fifteen days.³ In Emperor v. Sooba,⁴ Kendall, J., of the High Court of Allahabad, observed as follows :

“Two considerations that should influence the Court in deciding whether a remand should be granted are —

1. whether sufficient evidence has been obtained to raise a suspicion that the accused may have committed the offence and it appears likely that further evidence may be obtained by a remand, and

2. whether the time asked by the police for the remand is, in the circumstances of the case, reasonable or not.”

A mere expectation that after sometime by dint of enquiry some evidence might be obtained is not a sufficient cause for remand. It is only after sufficient evidence has been obtained to raise a suspicion that the accused may have committed an offence, that a likelihood of obtaining further evidence will be a reasonable cause for remand.⁵ Where some evidence was available but it appeared to the Magistrate necessary to defer the examination so that the inquiry might be continuous, a further remand was held justified.⁶ Similarly, where it was proved by an affidavit that there was a conspiracy and it was also proved by sufficient evidence that the accused were members of that conspiracy, it was held that the Magistrate was justified in keeping them in custody for such period as appeared to him to be reasonable.⁷ But where the complainant and his witnesses were not validly bound over to appear and did not appear on the date of the enquiry, it was held that a detention of the accused was not justified.⁸ A remand for the purpose of getting a confession from the accused is most improper.⁹

Where, after one remand the accused is brought up and a further remand is asked for, some direct evidence of his guilt should be required to justify his further detention, and with each remand the necessity for producing such evidence increases.¹⁰

In the undermentioned case¹¹ it was held by the High Court of Calcutta that the language of sub-s.(1) shows that where the Magistrate properly directs a postponement, he has unfettered discretion to remand the accused to custody. It was further held that even assuming that there must be reasonable cause, not only for the order of postponement but for the order of remand, the explanation to the section describes only one type of reasonable cause and there may be reasonable cause for a remand even though the circumstances do not fall under the terms of the explanation.

19. Remand in absence of accused. — A remand cannot be granted in the absence of the prisoner. As has been seen already, the use of the word 'remand' shows that a prisoner is brought up under custody and is re-committed to custody.¹

20. Period of detention. — There is no limit set to the total period of a series of orders of remand under this section¹ provided no single order of remand exceeds fifteen days at a time.² An accused is entitled to have the evidence against him recorded as early as possible³ and the fact that there may be a large body of evidence forthcoming against him is not a good ground for detention for an inordinate period.⁴

Where no evidence of an incriminating nature was forthcoming even after the remand for six weeks, a further detention was held not justified.⁵ But in a conspiracy case where considerable time is required to collect evidence, detention for a period of three months was held good.⁶

21. "By a warrant." — A warrant for further detention of an accused should be a warrant of commitment directed to some jailor or other person having authority to receive and keep prisoners. The warrant must state that the prisoner is charged with some particular offence.¹

22. Magistrate's liability for unreasonable detention. — A Magistrate who, without reasonable cause and without good faith delays proceeding with the trial of persons whom he keeps in jail, will be liable to an action in damages notwithstanding the Judicial Officers' Protection Act, XVII of 1850.¹

1. Legislative changes.

Difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872 —

The Code of 1861 contained no provision such as that found in this section and it was not settled whether there might be a compromise in a criminal case.¹

Section 188 of the Code of 1872 provided that in the case of offences which may lawfully be compounded, injured persons may compound the offences out of Court or in Court with the permission of the Court. What those offences were "which may lawfully be compounded," were not mentioned in the section; for that information one had to refer to the exception to S. 214, Penal Code.

Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882 —

Section 345 of the Code of 1882 gave a tabulated list that was intended to be exhaustive of the offences that were compoundable. The Code also, for the first time, introduced a distinction between offences

Section 345 — Note 1

1. ('12) 40 Cal 113 (117) : 15 Ind Cas 259 (259), Majibar Rahman v. Mukhtashed.

compoundable with the permission of the Court and those compoundable without such permission. In keeping with this amendment to the Procedure Code and almost simultaneously with it, an amendment was made to S. 214, Penal Code, by Act VIII of 1882, substituting for the original exception, referred to above, the exception that now finds place in the section, reading thus: "The provisions of Ss. 213 and 214 do not extend to any case in which the offence may lawfully be compounded."

Changes introduced in 1898 —

Sub-section (5) was newly added.

Amendments introduced by Act XVIII of 1923 —

- (1) Section 503, Penal Code, was added to the list of offences compoundable without leave of Court.
- (2) The present sub-s. (2) was substituted for the original sub-section thus enlarging the list of offences compoundable with the leave of Court under sub-s. (2).
- (3) Sub-section (4) was amended by substituting the words "under the age of eighteen years or is" for the words "a minor," thus making it clear that the age of majority is eighteen years. (There was a doubt regarding this before — See Note 10.) The leave of the Court in the case of composition on behalf of persons under disability has also been made a necessary condition.
- (4) Sub-section (5A) was newly added. (See Note 16.)
- (5) Sub-section (6) has been amended by adding the words "with whom the offence has been compounded" at the end so as to make it clear that the effect of a composition is to acquit only the accused with whom the offence has been compounded thereby setting at rest the controversy on this point also. See Note 18.

2. Scope and principle. — The law makes a difference between various classes of offences and allows compromise in some and no compromise in others.¹ Competence to accept satisfaction for wrong done to oneself which follows from the general rule of freedom of transactions is subject to limitations, those limitations corresponding generally with classes of wrongs in which, though a personal injury is sustained, a civil suit is not allowed, or is allowed only after the public interest has been satisfied. In such a case, the institution of a prosecution is a duty which cannot be neglected in consideration of any private advantage.²

The principle of English law is that the composition of an offence is illegal if the offence is one of public concern, but lawful if the offence is of a private nature and for which damages may be recovered in a civil action. This principle was adopted in this country also, but there was, before the Code of 1882, an uncertainty as to what exactly were the cases which were compoundable.³

The tabulation of offences in this section now removes all uncertainty⁴ and must be taken as a complete guide and test on the matter.^{4a} The policy of the Legislature adopted in this section is that in the case of certain minor offences, where the interests of the public are not vitally affected, the complainant should be permitted to come to terms with the party against whom he complains, the offences being specified in the section.⁵ Where an offence with which a particular person is charged is compoundable, he is at liberty to come to a settlement with the prosecution and the settlement so arrived at cannot be considered to be one, the consideration for which is illegal.⁶ Where a case has once been brought to Court and the parties have adjusted the matter between themselves lawfully, it cannot be said that they are hushing up the matter.⁷

The provisions of the section are not limited to cases wherein the accused pleads guilty. Such a view would limit the scope of the section to those comparatively few cases in which the accused is advised that defence would be hopeless.⁸

The section does not apply to offences punishable under laws other than the Penal Code.⁹

3. Withdrawal and composition compared. — An act of compounding is different from the withdrawal of a complaint made to a Magistrate. A withdrawal must be by intimation to the Magistrate and the complainant is required to satisfy the Magistrate that there are sufficient grounds for permitting him to withdraw it.¹ A withdrawal is permissible in all summons-cases. Composition is only permitted in respect of specified offences some of which are summons-cases and others not, the offences being mentioned in this section. Again, withdrawal is the act of one party to the proceeding, viz., the complainant, whereas the composition of an offence obviously requires the co-operation of both parties. Permission is necessary in the case of withdrawal, because it is the act of one party alone. Complainants otherwise would be at liberty to bring frivolous and vexatious complaints and withdraw them calmly when they have caused the accused enough of annoyance and degradation. There is no such abuse of process to be guarded against in a composition, it being the act of both the parties.² Withdrawals are confined to summons-cases; warrant-cases cannot be withdrawn.³ A complaint can be withdrawn only by the complainant, who may not necessarily be the person injured.⁴ The word "compound" means to withdraw for a consideration, and not merely to withdraw.⁵ See also section 248 Note 3.

Whether a petition is one for withdrawal or compromise, is to be judged from the fact whether the accused consented to it or not. The substance and not merely the form of the petition should be considered.⁶ When the complainant put in a petition before the Court not asking for permission to withdraw but saying that he did withdraw against one of the accused as there had been an apology, and he wished the case to proceed only against the other accused, it was held that it was not a case of mere withdrawal but was one of composition;⁷ and where the complainant wrote out and gave to the accused a document as follows: "This is to say that Mr. John came to me and offered an unconditional apology; I beg to withdraw the case against him", the document was held to mean that the offence was compounded and not merely withdrawn.⁸ It is open to the Magistrate to question the complainant to satisfy himself whether an application is in fact one for composition or for withdrawal.⁹

4. What amounts to composition. — A composition is an arrangement or settlement of differences between the injured party and the person against whom the complaint is made.¹ A mere application by the complainant for permission to withdraw the case because his witnesses had turned round is not a composition of the offence.²

The compounding of an offence supposes an arrangement whereby the parties have settled their differences and not a mere arrangement to settle their disputes in future as the result of some action either by themselves or third parties.³ An incomplete arrangement will not amount to an actual acquittal within the meaning of the law.⁴

Pending a criminal case, the parties entered into an agreement referring their disputes to arbitration. No arbitration took place, but it was argued that the very signing of the muchlika for reference to arbitrators amounted to a composition. It was held, however, that the muchlika was only one step towards the composition and that there would have been a composition only if the muchlika had been carried out and an award had been arrived at according to its terms.⁵

A Magistrate is not bound to recognise a reference to arbitration and wait for the award, but it will be reasonable for him to do so. If he, however, chooses to wait and there is an award, the award may amount to a composition.⁶ Where parties entered into a sort of compromise previously before a muktear to whom the case had been sent for local inquiry, but on the records being sent to the Magistrate both parties resiled from the agreement, and then on the Magistrate's summoning the accused the latter sought to have the so-called compromise recognised, it was held that he could not take advantage of the compromise previously entered into before the local enquiry officer.⁷

As to the effect of an agreement to be bound by the evidence on oath of a certain witness, see the undermentioned case.⁸

5. The offence must be compoundable. — It is against public policy to compound a non-compoundable offence.¹ The Legislature has laid down in this section the test for determining the classes of offences which concern individuals only as distinguished from those which have reference to the interests of the State, and Courts of law cannot go beyond that test and substitute for it one of their own.² It is the duty of a criminal Court to refuse to allow the withdrawal of the prosecution if the case is non-compoundable.³

A Magistrate should consider all the circumstances and make up his mind that only a compoundable offence is proved before he allows a compounding.⁴ Where the evidence taken by a Magistrate clearly disclosed a non-compoundable offence, it was held that he had no authority to allow the offence to be compounded and in doing so had usurped jurisdiction not vested in him.⁵ See also the undermentioned cases.⁶ The withdrawal from the prosecution in a case in which the offence charged is non-compoundable has not the effect of an acquittal;⁷ and an agreement entered into between the complainant and the accused for the refund of money embezzled by the latter was not allowed to be pleaded as a bar of prosecution for the offence.⁸

To determine whether a case is compoundable or not, the offence with the commission of which the accused were charged in the complaint or with which the Court charged them should be looked into.⁹ Where the offence, so far as was then known, believed and alleged, was punishable under section 323, it was held that the composition was legal.¹⁰ If a complaint alleges circumstances constituting a compoundable offence, as also other circumstances alleging a non-compoundable offence, it has to be seen what are the essential circumstances.¹¹

The question of a case being compoundable or not must be decided with reference to the state of facts existing at the date of the application to compound. It is not possible for the Court to see what the ultimate result of the case will be.¹² Where a Magistrate allowed the non-compoundable offence of rioting to be compounded upon a mere surmise, based on no evidence, that the case might in the end turn out to be one of a compoundable offence, it was held that he had no such power.¹³

Though the complainant accuses a person of a compoundable as well as of a non-compoundable offence, if the Magistrate issues a summons to the accused for the compoundable offence alone, a composition may be effected.¹⁴ Conversely, if in the trial of a compoundable offence, an offence which is not compoundable is by oversight mentioned in the summons, it does not deprive the parties of their right to compound.¹⁵

Where a person was convicted of a non-compoundable offence but on appeal was acquitted of that but the appellate Court considered that he should be convicted of a compoundable offence of which he had not been tried by the Magistrate, it was held that he should be allowed an opportunity of compounding the offence, if he could, before being convicted of the same.¹⁶ Where this opportunity was not allowed, the High Court allowed it in revision.¹⁷

6. Consideration. — The compounding of an offence signifies that the person against whom the offence has been committed has received some gratification, not necessarily of a pecuniary character, to act as an inducement for his desiring to abstain from a prosecution.¹

The composition spoken of in this section is in the nature of a contract, but monetary consideration is not necessary.² It has even been suggested that a lawful composition may be effected within the scope of this section without the passing of any consideration, the only essential thing required being that some arrangement should have been arrived at between the parties, which settles their differences.³ The Court is not concerned with the nature or value of the consideration. If the complainant considers that his grievance is redressed by the mere fact of respectable persons having intervened, though he has received no money payment or even a direct apology from the accused, he is, nevertheless, at full liberty to compound the prosecution.⁴ For instance, where a mere apology was the consideration, see the undermentioned case.⁵

7. Free will is necessary. — Although the provisions of the Contract Act may not apply, the proof of the arrangement must be similar to that which a Court requires for the proof of any agreement which is in issue, and unless it appears that the parties were free from influence of every kind and were fully aware of their respective rights, it would be impossible to give effect to a so-called arrangement or composition.¹

8. Compoundable offences. — Under s. 188 of the Code of 1872, which did not give a list of compoundable offences, it was held that the test for determining whether an offence was compoundable or not was that wherever a word such as "voluntarily," "intentionally," "fraudulently," etc., was an essential part of the definition of the offence, it was not compoundable, but that where the offence was one irrespective of the intention and for which a civil action might be brought at the option of the persons injured, instead of criminal proceedings, it was compoundable.¹

Note 8

The essence of an offence under S. 143 is the combination of several persons united in the purpose of committing a criminal offence and such a combination in itself constitutes an offence distinct from the criminal offence which these persons agree to commit. So, though the law may allow the latter offence to be compounded, the effect of such composition is not to annul the common object charged, and the prosecution under S. 143 will not fall to the ground but may be proceeded with.²

The offence of rioting under S. 147 of the Penal Code, being an offence against the public tranquillity, primarily concerns the State more than the individual, and that is probably one reason why that offence is not included by the Legislature in the category of compoundable offences.³

The offences of extortion and fabricating false evidence are not private disputes and neither of these offences is compoundable.⁴

An offence under S. 21 of the Cattle Trespass Act is not compoundable. But where that offence was charged along with an offence under S. 323, Penal Code, and the parties effected a compromise in respect of the latter offence, it was held that the Magistrate, if he thought fit to do so, was entitled to deal with the compromise as a withdrawal of the complaint in respect of the offence under the Cattle Trespass Act, because a case in respect of such offence being a summons-case would result in an acquittal if no evidence were adduced.⁵

9. Who can compound. — Any person may set the criminal law in motion, but it is only the person specified in S. 345 who can compound the offence.¹ Hence, a husband may be a complainant when the offence is defamation of his wife by the imputation of unchastity to her but it is only the wife who is entitled to compound the offence.² Similarly, in the case of the offence of abduction, though the complaint may have been preferred by another person, e. g., the father of the girl in whose custody the girl may have been at the time of the abduction, still it is only the husband who is competent to compound the offence.³

The offence of hurt can be compounded only by the person to whom the hurt is caused, and neither his heirs nor any other person can compound the offence.⁴ The offence of criminal trespass can be compounded by the person in whose possession the property was,⁵ the offence of wrongful restraint by the person restrained⁶ and the offence of wrongful confinement by the person confined.⁷

But where a person sends another man to the Court to represent him in filing a complaint, the Court is perfectly justified in accepting the latter's statement that he desires to compound the offence with the assumption that he is authorized by the former to compound it, and under the circumstances, it is not incumbent on the Court, before allowing the case to be compounded and acquitting the accused, to make any inquiry into his authority.⁸

10. Minor.— Sub-section (4) clearly implies that a person under eighteen years of age cannot compound an offence. Previous to the amendment of the sub-section in 1923, the word used in the section was a "minor" and no reference was made to the age limit. It was held that the age of majority contemplated by this section was not to be regulated by the personal law of the party concerned and that the effect of this section read with S. 3 of the Indian Majority Act was that a person under eighteen years of age could not lawfully compound the offences declared to be compoundable by this section.¹ This view has been given effect to by the amendment.

A husband committed the offence of hurt against his wife, a minor. She, at the suggestion of her father with whom she was living, filed a complaint against her husband. It was held that the father of the girl was competent to compound the offence on her behalf.² Where an offence is compounded on behalf of a minor under sub-s. (4), the permission of the Court is necessary for such composition.³

11. Composition under sub-section (1).— In cases falling under sub-s. (1), no leave of the Court is necessary for compounding¹ and in such cases the Magistrate has no option but is bound to allow the compromise.² Parties are entitled to compound such offences unconditionally and when a razinama is filed by them, it is not for the Magistrate to inquire whether the complaint was frivolous or vexatious.³ The mere fact that the accused has been sent up by the police does not prevent the person mentioned in the third column of the table from compounding the offence.⁴

Where the offence is compoundable by parties without the leave of the Court, and it is so compounded, and a deed of composition is filed by all the parties present in Court, the only verification necessary is to see whether the parties signed it and understood its contents; the Magistrate should not adjourn the case for verification or call for further proof of the compromise but should, without unnecessary delay, acquit the accused.⁵

Where the Court has drawn up a charge of an offence compoundable without the sanction of the Court and after this charge has been read and explained to the accused and pleaded to, a petition of composition is presented to it, the Court should at once accept the petition and acquit the accused; it has no power at that stage to alter the charge; the composition has the effect of an acquittal and is complete immediately the complainant puts it forward in Court.⁶ Where a Magistrate records a compromise, he becomes functus officio, and an order stating that the parties should again appear on another date is of no effect.⁷

In cases falling under sub-s. (1) in the absence of any express provision to the contrary, the natural interpretation is that the composition is not limited to acts done in Court or to cases in which the parties continue to be of the same mind until the case comes on for further hearing before the Court.⁸ So far at least as offences falling under sub-s. (1) are concerned, there is no necessity for the composition to be effected in Court in criminal trials any more than in civil suits.⁹

12. Compositions under sub-section (2). — In cases governed by sub-s. (2), no effect can be given to a compromise as a plea in bar of conviction unless the Court has sanctioned the compromise. Without the sanction the so-called compromise arrived at between the parties is of no effect. The jurisdiction of the Court to try the offence is unaffected and there is no rule of law which would enable the Court in a case falling under sub-s. (2) to order an enquiry into the factum of compromise alleged by one party and denied by the other.¹

An agreement to compound an offence falling within this sub-section can only be effected with the Court's permission after the institution of criminal proceedings.^{1a} Where an agreement to compound has been arrived at, the operation of a composition is suspended till the Court sanctions it. But where the composition has been made out of Court and at a certain stage in the proceedings the Court gives its sanction thereto, the composition is not bad.²

The only Court which has power under S. 345, sub-s. (2), is the Court before which the prosecution is pending.³ A police-officer is not competent to entertain an application for withdrawal of a complaint, as permitting the withdrawal of a complaint is a judicial act the exercise of which is vested in the Magistrate by Ss. 218 and 215, and the police have no authority to interfere in such matters.⁴

The judicial officer charged with the duty of determining judicially matters which come before him should himself decide the petition for withdrawal of a complaint or petition for a compromise and should not refer it to the District Magistrate or the police for their opinion.⁵ It is the duty of the Magistrate in each case, which is compoundable with his permission, to decide whether or not he should allow the compromise, and the responsibility rests with him.⁶

In granting permission, the Court should exercise a sound and reasonable discretion. Permission is not to be granted as a matter of course.⁷ A Magistrate is bound to consider all facts before acceding to a sanction; he ought not to permit an offence to be compounded until

Notes 12-14

In allowing a compromise, a Magistrate may impose a condition as to payment of some compensation to the injured man.²⁰

The mere fact that a petition for compromise is filed in Court (but is not allowed) is no ground for the reduction of a sentence.²¹

13. Proof of composition. — Where an accused person alleges that the offence of which he is charged has been compounded, the onus is on him to show that there has been a real and valid composition with the person entitled to compound.¹ Before a composition can be allowed, the Court must be satisfied that it is legal and valid in law.² Where a compromise is alleged by one party and denied by the other, the Magistrate must try the issue.³ An order of the Magistrate, acquitting the accused without inquiry into the truth of the alleged compromise, is bad in law and may be set aside.⁴

14. Stage at which a compounding may be effected. — An offence, which is compoundable without the permission of the Court, may be compounded even before the filing of a complaint.¹ A case may be compounded at any time before judgment is pronounced.² The fact that the prosecution evidence has been closed and that a charge has been framed is no bar to the composition as the offence can be compounded at any time before the passing of the sentence.³ After conviction, however, there can be no composition except with the leave of the appellate Court.⁴ Where an order is made by a District Magistrate under S. 435, calling for the record and proceeding before a Magistrate with a view to withdrawing the case and transferring it to another Magistrate, the jurisdiction of the former Magistrate is suspended and he is not, therefore, entitled to record a composition of the offence and acquit the accused, though at that time the case has not actually been transferred from his file.⁵

15. Composition after committal or conviction.—A committal once made by a Magistrate cannot be annulled by his allowing the prosecutor to file a compromise.¹ After conviction a composition can be effected only with the leave of the appellate Court.²

Where an accused is tried and convicted of an offence which is compoundable, but on appeal the conviction is set aside and a re-trial ordered, it is open to the complainant and accused to compound the case in the same manner as they might have done prior to the conviction, and no leave of the appellate Court is necessary.³

A compromise entered into after the hearing of the appeal is too late and does not come within S. 345.⁴

16. High Court's powers in revision.—Before the introduction of sub-s. (5A) by Act XVIII of 1923, divergent views were held as to whether a High Court had power to apply the powers granted in S. 345 to cases in revision; some cases holding that the High Court had no such power¹ and other cases taking the opposite view.² The introduction of sub-s.(5A) leaves the position free from doubt and explicitly confers on the High Court, acting in the exercise of its powers of revision under S. 439, power to allow any person to compound offences which may lawfully be compounded.³ One of the objects of the Legislature in enacting sub-s.(5A) was, in suitable circumstances, to allow the parties to compromise their disputes even after the cases in which they were concerned had been heard and determined by the Courts competent to try them.⁴ But the sub-section should be interpreted very strictly and the discretion conferred upon the High Court should be exercised very sparingly and only in suitable cases.⁵ The sub-section has to be read subject to the preceding sub-sections of S. 345 especially sub-ss.(1) and (2), and so read it is clear that sub-s.(5A) merely confers jurisdiction on the High Court in the exercise of its powers of revision under S. 439 to allow the aggrieved persons mentioned in column three of the tables attached to sub-ss.(1) and (2) to compound the various offences mentioned in those sub-sections. Thus, it would follow that ordinarily the party who seeks to invoke the jurisdiction of the High Court under sub-s.(5A) must be the person aggrieved by the offence which has been committed and not an accused person or a person who has been convicted in respect of that offence.⁶

It will not be competent for the High Court to allow a compromise to be recorded under sub-s.(5A) unless the aggrieved persons were actually before the High Court and had expressly recorded their consent to such a compromise being recorded.⁷

It has also been held that where the proceedings before the lower Courts disclose no irregularity or impropriety, the exceptional power conferred on the High Court under sub-s.(5A) should not ordinarily be used except in a case in which the record indicates that the parties made some attempt to compromise their differences while the matter was still before the trial Court and before that Court passed final orders in the case.⁸

17. Rescission of compromise. — A composition once effected cannot be withdrawn.¹ It is entirely immaterial whether the terms of the compromise have been carried out or not, the sole question being whether there was a composition or not; a breach of the agreement might give rise to other remedies.² Since the compromise has the immediate effect of acquittal (see Note 18) so as to deprive the Magistrate of his jurisdiction to try the case, the subsequent withdrawal from it by any party can neither affect the acquittal nor revive the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to proceed with the case.³

18. Effect of compromise. — When a case is compounded, it results not merely in a discharge but in an acquittal and until such order of acquittal is properly set aside, the accused cannot be prosecuted again for the same offence¹ or for any other offence (which is not distinct) for which a different charge from that which was compounded might have been framed on the same facts.² Where at the time of compromise of the offence it was believed that the offence fell under S. 323, it was held that the discovery later that it fell under S. 325 would not enable the Magistrate to re-open the prosecution for that offence.³ The composition of one offence will not, however, bar a prosecution for a distinct offence of which the accused might have been charged on the same facts under S. 235(1).⁴ Moreover, a composition has the effect of an acquittal only in respect of the offence which has been compounded and not of the other offences of which the accused is charged in the case⁵ and only as between the person who is entitled to compound and the accused with whom the composition takes place.⁶ There was a doubt prior to the amendment of the Code in 1923 as to whether in the case of several accused the compounding of the offence against one or some of them alone affects the case against the others — some cases holding that it did not⁷ and others that it did.⁸ The controversy has been set at rest by the amendment of sub-s.(6).⁹

If a non-compoundable case is dismissed on the parties coming to an amicable settlement, the dismissal does not amount to an acquittal but only to a discharge and does not bar the revival of the prosecution.¹⁰ Where an order of acquittal has been passed on an invalid composition, it may be set aside in revision.¹¹ A Magistrate is not competent to award compensation to the accused where an offence is compounded under S. 345.¹² The reason is that section 250 only applies where the Magistrate discharges or acquits the accused whereas under this section the acquittal takes place automatically on the composition of an offence.

But though the Magistrate cannot allow compensation, if the complaint is wholly false, he may consider whether a criminal prosecution for making a false complaint is desirable in the interests of justice.¹³ In the case of a dispute between two brothers wherein the prosecution for theft was found to be false, it was held that the parties being brothers, the prosecution of the complainant under S. 182 should not have been instituted.¹⁴

If a case is compounded, the composition does not prevent the complainant being charged under S. 211 if the complaint was false.¹⁵

Where a compromise has been entered into, orders passed in connexion with the compromise by the Magistrate before whom the case was pending must be deemed to have been passed by him in his judicial capacity.¹⁶

Where an offence under S. 324, Penal Code, committed by a person who has executed a security bond under S. 107 to keep the peace is compounded, the composition has the effect of acquittal of the accused and unless there is any other evidence on the record to show that he committed the breach of the peace, the bond cannot be forfeited.¹⁷

19. Sub-section (7). — The provisions of sub-s. (7) seem to be perfectly general and govern the composition of offences whether any steps have been taken or not to prosecute the offender.¹

Section 345 contains provisions with regard to : (a) persons who may compound ; (b) the nature of offences which may be compounded ; (c) the stage at which composition is sought to be made and (d) permission of Court in certain cases. Sub-section (7) must be taken to mean that no offences shall be compounded except where the provisions of S. 345 are satisfied as to all these matters.²

20. Civil suit. — Where the offences were compoundable and the complainant had already sued the accused on the same cause of action and obtained adequate damages, it was held that, in the circumstances of the case, it was not necessary in the ends of justice that he should again be put to trial in a criminal Court for the same offence.¹ The effect of the compounding of an offence which is compoundable, apart from the acquittal of the accused, would be that

21. Procedure in non-compoundable cases where injured party declines to prosecute. — Once the criminal law is set in motion by the issue of process in a non-compoundable case, the Magistrate must require the complainant to carry his prosecution through to the end.¹ The Legislature has not left it to the will of a Magistrate to proceed or not, as he thinks fit, with cases which cannot be legally compounded. It requires him, when once the complaint for such an offence is before him, to make a complete inquiry and to see that the accused who is guilty is brought to punishment.²

In non-compoundable cases, once action has been taken the case will normally proceed and it is nowhere provided that a desire on the part of the complainant to refrain from further pursuing the case shall justify the arrest of further proceedings. The final responsibility of such cases, whether instituted on complaint or otherwise, rests with the State.³

1. Legislative changes.

Difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872 —

- (1) Section 276 of the Code of 1861 contemplated reference only by a "subordinate Magistrate." The subsequent Codes have omitted the qualifying word "subordinate," so that now a reference may be made by any Magistrate.
- (2) Under the Code of 1861 a submission of a case could be made only to the Magistrate to whom the Magistrate submitting the same was subordinate. From the Code of 1872 onwards the section has been altered so as to allow a reference to "such other Magistrate having jurisdiction, as the Magistrate of the district (District Magistrate) directs."
- (3) There was a specific provision in the Code of 1861 requiring that the Magistrate to whom a case was submitted, or the officer subordinate to him, to whom it may be referred, shall examine the parties and witnesses and proceed in all respects as if no proceedings had been held in any other Court. The later Codes have omitted this specific provision. As to the effect of this, see Note 5.

Difference between the Codes of 1872, 1882 and 1898 —

- (1) Both the Codes of 1861 and 1872 restricted the application of the section to cases which the Magistrate was not competent to try or commit for trial. Section 346 of the Code of 1882 and the present section have removed such restriction. See Note 2.

Notes 1-2

- (2) Section 45 of the Code of 1872 applied even to Magistrates within the presidency towns. The Codes of 1882 and 1893 have restricted the application of the section to trials before Magistrates outside the presidency towns.

2. Scope and applicability of the section. — This section enacts the procedure to be followed by Provincial Magistrates where, in the course of an enquiry or a trial, the evidence appears to warrant a presumption that the case is one —

- (1) which should be tried by some other Magistrate in the district, or
(2) which should be committed for trial by some other Magistrate in the district.

The words “should be tried or committed for trial by some other Magistrate” do not necessarily mean that the Magistrate who is to take action under this section has no jurisdiction to try the case himself. Even if he has such jurisdiction he may still be of opinion that it “should be tried” by some other Magistrate on grounds such as complexity of facts, convenience of parties, etc.

The provisions of this section should be construed so as not to overlap or conflict with Ss. 347, 348 and 349 which are specific provisions providing for particular classes of cases. Where, therefore, a case falls under S. 347, S. 348 or S. 349, the Court should only act under that section and not under S. 346. Thus, where a person is accused of an offence punishable with imprisonment for three years or upwards under Ch. XII or Ch. XVII of the Penal Code and by reason of previous convictions for similar offences would be liable for enhanced punishment in the event of his conviction, for the present offence, the proper procedure is under S. 348 and this section is irrelevant in this connexion.² Similarly, where the Magistrate is of opinion that the case is one which ought to be tried by a Court of Session and he is himself empowered to commit the same to such Court, he should act under S. 347 and not under this section.³

This section is not inapplicable to cases where the accused is a European British subject.⁴

3. Duty of the inferior Courts. — A Magistrate who finds that he has no jurisdiction to try a case cannot discharge an accused on that ground but should proceed under this section.¹ Nor can he clutch at jurisdiction by trying the accused for such offences only as he is competent to try even though other offences are disclosed during the trial which he is not competent to try.² Where, therefore, in the course of a trial for an offence which he is competent to try, the evidence discloses also an offence beyond his jurisdiction, he cannot ignore the latter and try the accused for the former offence only.³ Similarly, where the evidence discloses circumstances of aggravation which make the offence cognizable by a higher Court, he cannot ignore such circumstances and try the accused for the minor offence only.⁴ Where,

however, the graver offence disclosed was one for the trial of which sanction was necessary to be obtained, and such sanction had been refused, it was held that the trial for the lesser offence was not incompetent.⁵

But the fact that the Magistrate ignores the circumstances disclosing a graver offence for which he is not competent to try, and tries for the lesser offence, will not render the proceeding void, the reason being that the Magistrate is competent to try for the lesser offence.⁶ The proceedings, therefore, will not be quashed where the accused is not prejudiced by such procedure and the sentence is not inadequate.⁷

A Magistrate is at liberty to stay proceedings at any time during the inquiry and submit it to the Magistrate to whom he is subordinate.⁸

This section requires that when in the course of an inquiry or trial it is found that the offence is beyond the competence of the Magistrate to try or inquire into, the latter should stay the proceeding and refer it to a superior Magistrate. A fortiori, where even at the outset, the offence disclosed on the allegations is beyond his competence to try or inquire into, he cannot ignore aggravating circumstances and proceed in respect of such offence as is within his jurisdiction.⁹

The provisions of this section imply, however, that a subordinate Magistrate can legally enquire into a serious offence up to the stage at which the question of charge or discharge has to be decided. The mere fact, therefore, that in order to make his case more serious a complainant alleges the commission of an offence which could not be tried by a junior Magistrate will not render the proceedings of that Magistrate illegal if he goes on to try that case and decide it holding that the facts disclosed show that it is the lesser offence which he is competent to try.¹⁰

See also section 28 Note 1 and section 207 Note 3.

Where the trying Magistrate finds that the offence disclosed can only be tried by a Magistrate of a higher class, an order of the District Magistrate cannot confer jurisdiction on him.¹¹

4. To whom the case should be submitted. — A Magistrate may submit a case under this section to —

- (1) any Magistrate to whom he is subordinate,¹ or
- (2) such other Magistrate as the District Magistrate directs.

In either case it is essential that the Magistrate to whom the case is submitted should be one having jurisdiction over it.²

Pending inquiry into a charge of house-breaking, the second class Magistrate of B division was transferred to A division. The case was, therefore, transferred to his file by the District Magistrate. In the course of inquiry the second class Magistrate found that the offence committed was robbery which was not triable by him and therefore he submitted the case to the sub-divisional Magistrate of A. It was held that the order of the District Magistrate transferring the case to the second class Magistrate at A did not give any jurisdiction to the sub-divisional Magistrate of A over the case (which arose in the territorial jurisdiction of the Court at B) and that the submission being thus not to a Magistrate "having jurisdiction" was bad.³

5. Trial must be de novo — Sub-section (2). — It is a general principle of criminal law that it is only an authority who has heard all the evidence that is competent to decide whether the accused is innocent or guilty.¹ The Criminal Procedure Code has, however, made exceptions to this general rule in ss. 349 and 350. The exception enacted in the latter section is almost a general rule by itself in that it provides that whenever any Magistrate ceases to exercise jurisdiction in a case and is succeeded by another [and under sub-s. (3)—this applies to cases transferred from one Magistrate to another], the latter can act on the evidence recorded by his predecessor, but the accused can claim a trial de novo and the High Court or the District Magistrate, as the case may be, may also, where the accused has been prejudiced by a conviction on such evidence, order a new trial or inquiry. Sub-s. (2) of that section expressly excepts proceedings under this section from the operation thereof.² The reason is that S. 350 contemplates cases where, at the time the evidence is recorded, the Magistrate recording it has jurisdiction to do so, while in cases of submission under this section on the ground that the Magistrate is not competent to try the case, the evidence is recorded by a Magistrate who is not competent to try the case.³

The general principle of law, namely, that a Magistrate cannot decide a case, who has not heard all the evidence, therefore applies to proceedings under this section and consequently, the Magistrate to whom a case is submitted under sub-s. (1) of this section cannot act on the evidence recorded by the submitting Magistrate but must, if he tries the case, try it de novo.⁴ If he refers the case to a subordinate Magistrate for trial, the latter must also, on the same principle, try it de novo.⁵ The accused has no power to waive his right to such a trial.^{5a}

As regards the power of the superior Magistrate acting under sub-s. (2) to commit the case to the sessions, acting on the evidence recorded by the submitting Magistrate, it has been held that such a procedure is not illegal.⁶ No reasons have been given for such a view, but it may be supported on the ground that the general rule prohibits only decisions by Magistrates who have not heard all the evidence, and that in committing the accused, there is no decision of the case.⁷ The High Court of Bombay has also held that such commitment is not illegal.⁸ But the reason given therefor, based on the assumption that s. 350 applies, but that only the proviso thereto does not apply, to determinations under sub-s. (2) of this section, is obviously incorrect in view of sub-s. (2) of s. 350 which clearly enacts that "nothing in this section applies to cases in which proceedings have been stayed under section 346."

6. Sub-section (2) — Reference to any sub-Magistrate having jurisdiction. — Where a sub-divisional Magistrate in Burma proceeding under sub-s. (2) of this section transferred a case for trial to the township Magistrate of P, the offence having been committed in the township of H, it was held that there was nothing illegal in doing so, inasmuch as a township is not recognized by the Code as a local area for purposes of territorial jurisdiction, and under s. 12, sub-section (2), except as otherwise provided, the jurisdiction and powers of Magistrates extend throughout the district in which they are appointed.¹

It has been held by a Full Bench of the High Court of Madras² that the Magistrate to whom proceedings are submitted under this section can, in a proper case, refer the case back to the very Magistrate who made the submission. In that case eight persons were accused before a second class Magistrate of having committed dacoity and one of them, the fifth accused, was alleged to have been armed with a deadly weapon. The Magistrate acting under sub-section (1) of this section submitted the proceedings to the Magistrate to whom he was subordinate. The latter went into the case and, finding that there was no case against the fifth accused who was the only person charged with having a deadly weapon, dismissed the complaint against him, and referred the case back to the Magistrate who made the submission so far as the other accused were concerned. It was held that he was not incompetent to do so.

8. "Inquiry," "evidence," meaning of. — The word "inquiry" is not restricted to proceedings after the Magistrate himself begins to take evidence. Nor is the word "evidence" restricted to evidence taken by the Magistrate himself. Where a Magistrate directs an inquiry by the police or another person under S. 202, he does so in the course of his own inquiry, and all facts and statements disclosed by such inquiry, including the report by the police or other person, are "evidence" on which a Magistrate can act under this section.¹

1. Legislative changes. — Section 256 of the Code of 1861 and S. 221 of the Code of 1872 which correspond to S. 347 of the present Code found a place in the chapter relating to the trial of warrant-cases, and the wording of these was such as to make them seem to be confined to "trial."

The Code of 1892 for the first time removed the section to the chapter dealing with general provisions as to inquiries and trials and by the insertion of the words, "in any inquiry" made it clear that the section applied not only to trials but also to inquiries. The reason for the change was possibly that according to some decisions a trial of a warrant-case did not begin till the accused had been charged and his plea taken, and in order to avoid all possible question as to the applicability of the provision to any stage of the proceedings before a Magistrate the Legislature inserted the words "in any inquiry."¹

The corresponding sections of the Codes of 1861 and 1872 provided that the Magistrate shall stop further proceedings "under this chapter" (namely the chapter relating to trial of warrant-cases) and commit under the provisions "hereinbefore contained." With the removal of the section from the chapter relating to trial of warrant-cases and its insertion in its present place, the reference to the chapter became inappropriate and was therefore omitted in the Code of 1882. But it has been held that the omission was not intended to make any difference or to dispense with obligation of the Magistrate to follow the provisions of chapter XVIII, the words "stop further proceedings" meaning only proceedings in the trial or enquiry in which the Magistrate is engaged.²

The Code of 1872 restricted the discretion of the Magistrate to such cases as the Magistrate could not or ought not to make over to a Magistrate specially empowered under S. 36. This restriction has been removed by the Code of 1882.

The Code of 1898 has made no change in the section.

The words "stop further proceedings and" after the words "he shall" in sub-s. (1) have been omitted by the amending Act XVIII of 1923 and the omission sets at rest the conflict as to whether the section is or is not subject to the provisions of chapter XVIII.³

2. Scope. — This section is supplementary to chapter XVIII and refers to a case which a Magistrate has first taken up with a view to disposing it himself, but which, he later finds, is one which ought to be tried by the Court of Session or the High Court. This section lays down the procedure to be followed when such a position arises.¹

The section does not apply to a case where a Magistrate thinks from the first that the case ought to be tried by the Court of Session. In such a case the Magistrate must conform to the provisions of S. 208 from the start.²

In the application of this section there is no distinction made between summons and warrant cases.³

Sections 346, 347 and 349. — A Magistrate taking up a case may try it himself if he has jurisdiction, or he may, if he thinks he cannot inflict an adequate sentence, act under S. 346 or S. 349 and send it to a higher Magistrate, or he may, if he thinks that it is a proper case for a Court of Session, commit the accused under S. 347; or if he has no power to commit, send it under S. 346 to another Magistrate for the purpose of commitment.⁴

3. "Before signing judgment." — A Magistrate has power at any stage of the proceedings to decide that the case is one which he ought not to try and which ought to be committed to sessions.¹ The discretion given to him by this section is not taken away even though a charge may have been drawn up² or because the Magistrate has issued summons to the defence witnesses.³ In a case where the Magistrate had as yet passed no order of discharge, he was held competent to commit to sessions.⁴ But once judgment is pronounced, the Magistrate cannot commit the case to the sessions because S. 403 would be a bar to further proceedings as was held in the undermentioned case⁵ decided with reference to S. 348 and, as S. 369 prevents a Court from altering or reviewing its judgment after it has signed it, except where such review or alteration is specially provided for.⁶

4. "Ought to be tried." — If the evidence discloses an offence triable only by a Sessions Court, the Magistrate must commit the case to the sessions.¹ But where the evidence discloses both an offence exclusively triable by a Sessions Court and an offence which the

Note 4 . .

Magistrate himself can try, a trial and conviction by the Magistrate in respect of the latter offence is not illegal.²

If the offence is one which is not exclusively triable by a Court of Session, the Magistrate can commit the accused to the Court of Session only if he be of opinion that the case is one which ought to be tried by that Court.³ The Magistrate must use his discretion in determining whether a particular case should be committed or not,⁴ and every circumstance of aggravation must be carefully weighed.⁵ The discretion given to the Magistrate by this section being a judicial one, it should be exercised with care and on some proper ground. The order of committal being a judicial order, the Magistrate should state his grounds for committing in order to enable the Court of Session or the High Court to judge whether the committal is a sound exercise of discretionary power.⁶ The reasons given should be not only for not discharging the accused, but also for committing him to sessions Court when the case is not exclusively triable by the latter.⁷ Failure to give reasons for committal as required by S. 213 may be only an irregularity where the case is one which plainly ought to be tried by Sessions Court, but where it is not exclusively triable by Sessions Court the failure amounts to an illegality.⁸ If no reasons are given or if the reasons given are bad in law, the committal may be quashed.⁹

There is a conflict of opinions as to whether the only grounds on which a Magistrate could commit are want of jurisdiction in himself, or his inability to punish adequately. Decisions which have been in favour of restricting the discretion of the Magistrate to these two grounds are based on the view that S. 347 is controlled by S. 254 which lays down that in the trial of a warrant-case where there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed an offence which the Magistrate is competent to try and which in his opinion could be adequately punished by him, he shall frame a charge against the accused.¹⁰ The opposite view is that S. 347 is not controlled by S. 254 and that want of jurisdiction in the Magistrate or his inability to punish adequately are not the only grounds on which he may commit a case to the sessions; the section is wide enough to include other grounds.¹¹ Thus, a Magistrate, though having power to try the case himself, may commit it to sessions if he thinks the gravity of the case requires that it be tried by such Court.¹²

There is nothing anywhere which compels a Magistrate to frame that charge which, on the most heinous view of the circumstances indicated by the evidence, is the gravest possible charge. It is left to the Magistrate to take a broad and commonsense view of the facts and determine whether the correct charge to be framed is or is not one which necessitates a trial by a Court of Session.¹³ A committal made under a misapprehension of the correct offence may be quashed.¹⁴ On the other hand, a Magistrate should not ignore aggravating circumstances and himself try a case which, taking a reasonable view of the depositions, must be regarded as involving the trial of the accused for a grave offence¹⁵ or one in which complicated or difficult questions of law or fact arise which he is neither by training nor experience qualified to try.¹⁶

To decide whether he shall or shall not commit the case to the Court of Session, a Magistrate has to consider the gravity of the offence, the punishment with which, in his opinion, it ought to be met and the section under which he charges the accused person. He may also consider special difficulties in the case or its peculiar importance and other matters might enter into his consideration.¹⁷ is already before the Court of Session may be a good ground for committing a case to the sessions,²³ it is not an absolute rule that all charges and counter-charges must be tried by the same Court.²⁴ The Bombay High Court also has held that the fact that a case is connected with another which has been committed to the sessions is no ground for committal when the connexion between the two cases is not such as would embarrass or prejudice the accused in the absence of such commitment.²⁵

The following have been held not to be sufficient grounds for committal :

- (1) The mere wish of parties²⁶ or the fact that the accused wants to have the benefit of a trial by jury.²⁷

Magistrate can inflict, he should commit the case. On the other hand, it has been pointed out that where the sub-Magistrate has no jurisdiction but the District Magistrate has, the former would be well advised to submit the case to the latter rather than to commit, so that the valuable time of the Sessions Court may be saved.³³ When two or more persons are jointly indicted and the jurisdiction of the Magistrate is ousted in the case of one of them, the proper course is to commit both or all for trial before a Court of Session.³⁴

Notes 4-5

5. "Under the provisions hereinbefore contained."— Before the amendment of this section, it contained the words "stop further proceedings." These words gave rise to a conflict of opinions, one view being that they permitted the Magistrate to disregard the provisions of chapter XVIII and commit the case to sessions immediately he formed the opinion that the case should be committed;¹ the other view was that s. 347 did not in any way override the provisions of chapter XVIII or dispense with the obligation of following them, and that the words "stop further proceedings" meant to stop proceeding with the case as a trial and to proceed to commit to sessions.² The conflict has been set at rest in favour of the latter view by the omission of the words in question.³ It is, therefore, settled law now, that this section is controlled by the provisions contained in chapter XVIII.^{3a} The Magistrate must, therefore, follow the procedure in chapter XVIII, for, it can scarcely be disputed that the words "under the provisions hereinbefore contained" must relate to those provisions in chapter XVIII which define the procedure to be followed in inquiries into cases triable by sessions.⁴

Section 347

The Magistrate need not, however, re-commence the inquiry or take evidence de novo. It is only required that the further proceedings necessary for commitment shall be taken as directed in chapter XVIII.⁵ From the moment the Magistrate decides to commit, what has hitherto been a trial becomes an enquiry under chapter XVIII.⁶ The charge already framed must be set aside in order that the Magistrate may get back to the stage at which preliminary case proceedings may be applied.⁷

But it is only in respect of the offence for which the accused is to be committed that the proceedings are taken out of chapter XXI. The other proceedings must remain covered by that chapter. So, where a Magistrate, having taken cognizance of a case, frames charges, comes to the conclusion that so far as one of the charges is concerned the accused should be committed, and as regards the other, the offence is not proved, he is entitled under S. 347 to commit for the former charge, but this does not affect his obligation to acquit the accused of the latter charge.⁸

Though the Magistrate need not commence proceedings de novo, once he decides to commit, he must not deprive the accused of any right which he might have exercised under chapter XVIII, had the case been treated from the outset as a preliminary enquiry.⁹ Where the accused has had no opportunity of adducing evidence before the committal, the committal should be quashed.¹⁰ Also, where the evidence had not been read over to the witnesses as required by S. 208 read with S. 360, it was held that it was not a mere formal omission but one that may deprive the accused of the valuable right to contradict the witnesses during the sessions trial by reference to their prior statements.¹¹

After the Magistrate has decided to commit the case, is the accused entitled to cross-examine the witness? If the accused has cross-examined the witnesses before the Magistrate decides to commit, he has no further right of cross-examination after the charge is amended. For, the amended charge is framed under S. 210 which does not allow the accused the right of further cross-examination.¹² In the undermentioned case,¹³ during the examination of the first witness for the prosecution the Magistrate intimated to the accused his intention of committing him to a Court of Session but the accused declined to cross-examine the witnesses and after the charge was framed he prayed that he might be allowed to do so, it was held that he was not entitled to do so. But it is surmised that if the accused, though having had the opportunity to cross-examine does not avail himself of it, because the enquiry having been originally under chapter XXI, he was led to believe that he would have the right of cross-examination after the charge is framed, the accused should not be prejudiced by the conversion of the trial into a preliminary enquiry and should be afforded an opportunity of cross-examination.¹⁴ When the application to cross-examine is made, before the Magistrate frames a charge and decides to commit the case, it must, of course, be granted.¹⁵ In the undermentioned case¹⁶ it was held that the accused would be allowed to cross-examine the witnesses if his application was made before the prosecution closed its case, but not if the application was made after. Referring to this decision, however, a recent Calcutta case has held that such a distinction did not exist.¹⁷

In order that a committal may be quashed on the ground that the provisions of chapter XVIII have not been followed, it must be shown that the accused has been prejudiced by the irregularity.¹⁸ But before the committal, the accused is entitled to claim that provisions relating to enquiries before the commitment shall be observed irrespective of any question as to prejudice.¹⁹

Since the effect of the Magistrate's decision to commit is to convert the proceedings into a preliminary enquiry, it follows that if there be a change of Magistrates before the actual committal, the accused will not be entitled to a de novo enquiry as proviso (a) of S. 350 (1) applies only to trials and not to enquiries.²⁰

Notes 1-2

1. Legislative changes. — The following changes were made in the section by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, XVIII of 1923:

- (1) The words "if the Magistrate before whom . . . committing the accused" in sub-s.(1) are new. The amendment has been made on the lines of S. 203.¹
- (2) In the same sub-section the words "is competent to try the case and" have been substituted for the words "before whom the proceedings are pending" in order "to make it clear that the section does not empower the Magistrate to pass a sentence in a case which he is not competent to try."²
- (3) The words "any Magistrate in the district" in the proviso to the same sub-section have been substituted for the words "the District Magistrate." By reason of the amendment a case of an old offender may now be transferred not only to a District Magistrate empowered under S. 30, but also to any other Magistrate in the district specially empowered under that section.
- (4) Sub-section (2) is new.

2. Scope of the section. — Section 75 of the Penal Code provides for enhanced punishment or punishment of a different kind for offences under chapter XII (offences relating to coin or Government stamp) and chapter XVII (offences against property) of the said Code where the accused has been previously convicted for a similar offence. There are also local or special laws which provide for enhanced punishment or punishment of a different kind on a second conviction for certain classes of offences specified therein. See for an illustration, S. 23 of the Criminal Tribes Act (VI of 1924).

This section specifies the tribunal to which old offenders in respect of the offences specified should be sent for trial by the Magistrates before whom they are charged. The object underlying the section is that the accused should be tried by a tribunal which could award him a punishment adequate to the circumstances of his case.

In order that this section may apply —

- (1) both the offences, namely, that for which the accused has been previously convicted and that for which he is being tried, must fall under one or other of the two chapters, namely chapter XII or chapter XVII of the Penal Code, and
- (2) both must have been offences punishable with imprisonment for a term of three years or upwards.

Section 348 — Note 1

2. Select Committee Report of 1922, clause 90.

Section 348
Notes 2-3

The above conditions are the same as those necessary for the applicability of s. 75¹ of the Penal Code and the cases bearing on the latter section have therefore been referred to in the following Notes as an aid to the interpretation of this section.

3. Previous conviction should have been under Chapter XII or Chapter XVII of the Penal Code. — As has been seen in Note 2 above, the previous conviction should have been one for an offence under chapter XII or chapter XVII of the Penal Code.¹ From this the following propositions follow :

- (1) An attempt (to commit an offence) punishable under s. 511 of the Penal Code not being an offence under chapter XII or chapter XVII of the Penal Code, a previous conviction therefor will not count for the purposes of this section.² Conversely, no previous conviction under chapter XII or chapter XVII of the Code can be reckoned against an accused when the subsequent offence with which he is charged is an attempt punishable under section 511.³
- (2) A previous conviction under any local or special law is not a conviction for an offence under the Penal Code and will not count

1. Section 75 of the Penal Code is given below for facility of reference :

for the purposes of this section.⁴ The Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court has, however, held that where an offender is dealt with under a special law which provides that certain offences punishable under the Penal Code are punishable under that law, S. 75 of the Penal Code will apply.⁵ See also the undermentioned cases.⁶

- (3) A previous conviction given before the Penal Code came into force cannot be taken into account for the purposes of this section.⁷

4. "Having been convicted." — The words "having been convicted shall be guilty of any offence" in S. 75 of the Penal Code have been held to imply that the previous conviction should have been before the commission of the offence with which the accused is subsequently charged.¹ The reason is that a man should be treated as an old offender only if it can be shown that the first conviction had no effect on him. It cannot be said that the first conviction had no effect in a case where such conviction was after the commission of the offence for which the accused is subsequently tried.² This section uses the words "is again accused of any offence, etc.," but it is conceived that the said principle will equally apply to the interpretation of this section also. Consequently, this section will not apply unless the offence with which a person is "again accused" was committed after the previous convictions.³ Under S. 75 of the Penal Code, the previous conviction must have been by a Court in British India or by a Court or tribunal, in any Indian State acting under the general or special authority of the Central Government or of the Crown Representative. A conviction by a Court in a Native State, not acting under any such authority, cannot be reckoned for the purposes of that section.⁴ See also the undermentioned case.⁵

5. "Punishable under . . . of the Indian Penal Code." — It is to be noted that for the application of this section it is not necessary that the previous sentence should have been three years or upwards; it is sufficient that the offence of which the accused was convicted is punishable under the Penal Code with imprisonment for three years or more. See also Note 3 above.

6. "For a term of three years or upwards." — Where the subsequent offence, though falling under chapter XII or chapter XVII of the Penal Code, is punishable with imprisonment for less than three years (e. g. S. 403, Penal Code), this section will not apply.¹

7. "Shall be committed." — It is the duty of the Magistrate to commit the accused to the Sessions Court or the High Court, as the case may be, if the conditions of the section are satisfied,¹ viz.,

- (1) that the accused has been previously convicted of an offence of the kind referred to in the section;
- (2) that the Magistrate is satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused, and
- (3) that the Magistrate is either not competent to try the case or is of opinion that he cannot himself pass an adequate sentence if the accused is convicted.

The prosecution and the Magistrate should, therefore, ascertain and take notice of any circumstances showing that the accused is a habitual offender who ought, under this section, to be committed.² For this purpose, the Magistrate must, either as a preliminary matter or at any rate before framing a charge, determine whether there has been a previous conviction; having decided that point, he will have to consider whether, in the circumstances of the case, his powers enable him to pass a sufficiently severe sentence. If they do not so permit, but the evidence does not warrant the discharge of the accused, he must frame a charge under S. 210 and commit him for trial under chapter 18 of the Code.³ When an old convict for theft is again found prowling about at night and seems to be again, under these circumstances, guilty of stealing, he has created against himself a presumption of criminal habit which, if unrebutted, would justify a Magistrate in applying, ordinarily, the rule of this section.^{3a}

The fact that the property stolen was small in value is no reason by itself for not committing the accused and for passing a small sentence on him.⁴ On the other hand, the Court should, as was held by Macleod, C. J., in King-Emperor v. Gala Mana,⁵ exercise a wise discretion in making the penalty fit the crime, and should not ordinarily consider petty offenders liable to such heavy punishment as to necessitate their committal to the Court of Session. Thus, it has been held that the lapse of a long time since the previous conviction together with the fact that the accused has been leading a blameless life in the interval will make the application of S. 75, Penal Code inappropriate.⁶ See also the undermentioned case.⁷

The Magistrate has no jurisdiction, if the conditions of the section are satisfied, to do anything but commit the case to the sessions or transfer it to a duly empowered Magistrate.⁸ He has thus no power to *find the accused guilty.*⁹ Accordingly, where the accused had been previously convicted for an offence under chapter XVII of the Penal Code and the Magistrate noted his opinion that a more severe punishment than he could impose was required, it was held that he would be acting ultra vires if he found the accused guilty.¹⁰ Where, however, the fact of the previous conviction is not known to the Magistrate at the trial and he tries the case and passes a sentence not inadequate for a first offence, he cannot be said to have acted with any material irregularity.¹¹

But where there were previous convictions alleged against the accused and the Magistrate, without questioning or calling for proofs of those convictions, held that they were not proved, and convicted and sentenced the accused, the omission was held to amount to a material error, the conviction and sentence were set aside and the case was remanded to the Magistrate with a view to proceed under this section.¹²

8. Magistrate cannot act under section 349. — It follows from what has been stated in Note 7 above that in cases where the accused is liable to enhanced punishment under S. 75 of the Penal Code, and the Magistrate thinks he cannot pass an adequate sentence, he must act under S. 348 and not under S. 349.¹

Where, in such case, he acts irregularly under S. 349, it is open to the District Magistrate to take the case on his own file or transfer it to that of a first class Magistrate, the proceedings, in either case, being taken de novo.²

9. "Unless he can himself pass an adequate sentence." — Where the Magistrate thinks that the circumstances of the case permit him to pass an adequate sentence, he should try and dispose of the case himself.¹ It is only where, in the exercise of his discretion, he is of opinion that a higher punishment than what he is empowered to award is necessary that he is bound to commit the accused to the Court of Session. If, in the exercise of his discretion, he thinks he can award an adequate sentence and tries the case himself, he cannot be said to have acted without jurisdiction, although a more adequate sentence could have been passed by his committing the accused to the Sessions Court.² An opinion has been expressed in the undermentioned case³ to the effect that even where the Magistrate considers that the circumstances of the case permit him to pass an adequate sentence, he may commit the accused to the Sessions Court for trial.

Old offenders should ordinarily be charged before first class Magistrates to enable adequate sentences being passed without the necessity of always committing the accused to the Court of Session or the High Court.⁴

10. Transfer to Magistrate specially empowered. — A Magistrate may at any stage of the proceedings without framing a charge send the accused to any Magistrate in the district specially empowered under S. 30 to be placed upon his trial. Assuming that a charge should be drawn up before sending the case to such Magistrate, the charge may be drawn up whenever the Magistrate finds the offence proved which may be at any stage; the evidence of one witness may suffice.¹ See also Note 11.

11. Procedure before specially empowered Magistrate. — Before the amendment of S. 350 it was held in some cases that as that section could not be held to cover a case of transfer from one Court to another, a specially empowered Magistrate to whom a case is transferred under S. 348 cannot act on the evidence already recorded by the transferring Magistrate but must hear the case de novo.¹ After the amendment of S. 350 by the addition of sub-s.(3) this is no longer good law.

But, though the combined effects of sections 348 and 350 entitle a Magistrate to rely on the evidence already recorded, he cannot, at the same time, proceed to re-commence the enquiry and also rely upon the previously recorded evidence.²

There is no provision for committing an accused person to the Magistrate empowered under S. 30 to be tried as at a Court of Session. He must try the accused as a Magistrate invested with special powers.³

349.* (1) Whenever a Magistrate of the second or third class, having jurisdiction, is of opinion, after hearing the evidence for the prosecution and the accused, that the accused is guilty, and that he ought to receive a punishment different in kind from, or more severe than, that which such Magistrate is empowered to inflict, or that he ought to be required to execute a bond under section 106, he may record the opinion and submit his proceedings, and forward the accused, to the District Magistrate or Sub-divisional Magistrate to whom he is subordinate.

(1A) When more accused than one are being tried together and the Magistrate considers it necessary to proceed under sub-section (1) in regard to any of such accused, he shall forward all the accused who are in his opinion guilty to the District Magistrate or Sub-divisional Magistrate.

(2) The Magistrate to whom the proceedings are submitted may, if he thinks fit, examine the parties and recall and examine any witness who has already given evidence in the case and may call for and take any further evidence, and shall pass such judgment, sentence or order in the case as he thinks fit, and as is according to law:

Provided that he shall not inflict a punishment more severe than he is empowered to inflict under sections 32 and 33.

Notes 1-2*1. Legislative changes.Changes introduced in the Code of 1872 —*

- (1) For the words "subordinate Magistrate," occurring in the Code of 1861 (S. 277) the words "Magistrate of the second or third class" were substituted.
- (2) The words "shall record the finding and submit his proceedings" were altered into "may record the finding and if sentence has not been passed, may submit his proceedings."
- (3) The words "forward the accused" were newly added.
- (4) Before the words "sentence or order" in paragraph 2 the word "judgment" was introduced.
- (5) A proviso limiting the power of the superior Magistrate to those ordinarily exercisable by him under S. 20 of that Act was newly added.

Changes introduced in the Code of 1882 —

- (1) For the words "finds an accused person guilty" in the first paragraph the words "is of opinion that the accused person is guilty" were substituted.
- (2) The words "after hearing the evidence for the prosecution" in the first paragraph were introduced.
- (3) For the words "record the finding" the words "record the opinion" were substituted.
- (4) The proviso was amended by the substitution of the words "shall not inflict a punishment more severe than under Ss. 32 and 33" for the words "shall not exceed the powers ordinarily exercisable under S. 20 of this Act."

Changes introduced in 1898 —

No change has been effected except the numbering of the first and second paragraphs of the old section as sub-sections (1) and (2).

Changes introduced in 1923 —

Sub-section (1A) has been introduced by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act XVIII of 1923. It is similar in terms to sub-s. (2) of S. 348 and is intended to secure identity of treatment to all accused.

2. Scope of the section. — It is a general principle of law that only an authority who has heard the evidence is competent to decide whether the accused is innocent or guilty.¹ This section creates an exception to this rule in that it provides that the Magistrate to whom the proceedings are submitted under this section may pass such judgment, sentence or order in the case as he thinks fit even on the evidence recorded by the referring Magistrate.² As such, it should be construed strictly.³

Section 349

In order that the section may apply, the following conditions must be satisfied —

- (1) The Magistrate submitting proceedings should have jurisdiction to try or commit the case.⁴
- (2) He must be of opinion, after hearing the evidence, that the accused is guilty and that he ought to receive a punishment, different in kind from, or more severe than, that which he is empowered to inflict,⁵ or that he ought to be required to execute a bond under section 106.
- (3) He should record such opinion.⁶

This section must be read subject to the provisions of S. 348 and when a case falls under that section, the Court should proceed only thereunder and not under this section.⁷

3. Who can make a reference under this section. — This section does not apply to first class Magistrates.¹ According to the Chief Court of Lower Burma, it does not also apply to Magistrates trying cases summarily, the reason being that the procedure of this section is obviously unsuited to cases tried summarily.² The High Court of Allahabad seems to hold a contrary view.^{2a}

It is in the discretion of the subordinate Magistrate to decide whether he will send up a case or not under this section. An order by a superior Magistrate directing a subordinate Magistrate to send up a case under this section is ultra vires.³ A District Magistrate is not competent to forbid, by circular, all subordinate Magistrates in his district from taking up cases (which the Criminal Procedure Code says they may take up) if they think they shall have to act under this section in disposing of the case.⁴

4. "Having jurisdiction."—A Magistrate has no power to refer, under this section, a case which he has no jurisdiction to try. If he does so, his proceedings are illegal and void and will not empower the superior Magistrate to proceed under sub-s. (2) of this section.¹ But where the offence was one for which the Magistrate was not competent to try the accused, but for which he was empowered to commit him to the Court of Session, it was held that he was not entirely without jurisdiction and that the Magistrate to whom he referred the case, could, if he thought proper, commit the same to the Court of Session.²

5. Record of opinion. — As has been seen in Note 2 above, it is necessary that the Magistrate should record his opinion as to the guilt of the accused and the necessity for inflicting on him a punishment different in kind from or more severe than that which he is empowered to give, or the necessity for taking a bond from him under S. 106 of this Code.

Where a case was transferred by a Magistrate of the third class to a District Magistrate without any request to the latter to take up the case and without stating any of the three grounds mentioned in the section, it was held that the transfer could not be considered to be one under this section.¹

6. Punishment "different in kind." — It has been held by the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur that a submission of proceedings for the purpose of taking action under S. 562 cannot be considered to be one under this section inasmuch as the order under that section directing the release of the accused on probation of good conduct is not a punishment at all, and is, therefore, not a "punishment different in kind" from that which the Magistrate is empowered to inflict.¹ In the undermentioned case² where the sub-Magistrate convicted the two accused and sent up the third (a youth) under this section because he could not deal with a juvenile offender, the High Court of Madras held that the case of all the three accused should have been referred and not that of the third accused alone. It seems to have been assumed that a submission of proceedings in respect of an adolescent offender for being dealt with under S. 562 may be done under this section. The actual decision was, however, to the effect that one of the accused alone could not be sent up under this section.

7. "More severe."—Where a Magistrate of the third class who is empowered to inflict a fine not exceeding fifty rupees convicted certain persons of theft, but sent them up to a superior Magistrate under this section recommending the infliction of a fine of Rs. 15 on them, it was held that the submission was improper inasmuch as the proposed fine could be inflicted by the third class Magistrate himself and as the section did not apply unless the referring Magistrate was of opinion that he was not competent to inflict the punishment deserved by the accused.¹

8. "Or that he ought to be required to execute a bond under section 106." — When a Magistrate is of opinion that the accused ought to be required to execute a bond under S. 106, he ought not to convict and sentence the accused before referring the case under this section, for S. 106 requires that the conviction and order for furnishing security should be passed by one and the same Magistrate.¹ If he convicts the accused, his recommendation that an order for furnishing security be passed will be without jurisdiction and any order of the superior Magistrate under S. 106 will also be without jurisdiction. It does not necessarily follow, however, that the conviction will be defective.² Similarly, where a second class Magistrate sent up a case to a joint Magistrate as he was of opinion that an order under S. 106 was necessary, and the latter passed the order under that section, but returned the case to the sub-Magistrate for conviction, it was held that the joint Magistrate acted without jurisdiction.³

9. Procedure of referring Magistrate.

"Cannot convict." — A Magistrate submitting proceedings under this section is required only to record his opinion that the accused is guilty¹ but cannot legally convict him.² But in view of the amendments effected in S. 245, sub-s. (2) and S. 258, sub-s. (2), it has been held that those sub-sections cannot be read as necessarily prohibiting a Magistrate dealing with a case under this section from finding the accused guilty. But the conviction will not be one that has any legality in the sense of prohibiting the sub-divisional Magistrate or District Magistrate from dealing with the case under this section, or as constituting a conviction which would prevent any further trial under S. 403.^{2a} Hence, where a Magistrate submitting a case under this section gives a conviction, it is not necessary that it should be formally quashed. It will be treated as mere surplusage and as a legal nullity, so that the Magistrate to whom the case is sent can proceed with it without a reference to the High Court for the purpose of having the conviction

Section 349

As to the difference between proceedings under this section and those under S. 562, see S. 562 Note 3.

"Forward the accused." — Under the Code of 1861 the subordinate Magistrate was not required to forward either the accused or the witnesses to the District Magistrate; he had only to submit his proceedings.⁵ It was nevertheless held that the accused was entitled to be present before the District Magistrate to offer such reasons as he may have against the finding of the sub-Magistrate or to offer his plea for a lenient sentence,⁶ the proceedings before the superior Magistrate being a continuation of the proceedings before the referring Magistrate.⁷

"Framing of charge." — See section 254 Note 6.

10. Sub-section (1A) — Several accused. — It was held under the Code of 1882 that it was open to a Magistrate to send up one only of several accused for enhanced punishment and to convict the others himself¹ and, in the absence of any appeal to him, the District Magistrate to whom the case of only some accused was referred had no jurisdiction to set aside the conviction of others regarding whom no reference had been made,^{1a} though it was desirable that all the accused should be sent up.² Shortly prior to the coming into force of the Amending Act of 1923, it was doubted in the undermentioned case³ whether in a case where the Magistrate considers it necessary to proceed against one of several accused under sub-section (1), he could validly forward all the other accused also.

Under the section as now amended in 1923, it is clear that all the accused must be forwarded in such cases.⁴ The failure to send up all the accused will not, however, vitiate the jurisdiction to try such of the accused as are actually sent up.⁵

The Magistrate is required to forward only such accused as are in his opinion guilty. An order, referring the case of those accused who in his opinion are not guilty, is illegal, they being entitled to an acquittal under section 258, sub-section (1).⁶

11. To whom reference can be made. — Under the Code of 1861 (section 277) the Magistrate had to submit his proceedings to the Magistrate to whom he was subordinate.¹ Under the present Code he should submit his proceedings to the District Magistrate or to a sub-divisional Magistrate, who alone has jurisdiction to dispose of the matter.² The City Magistrate of Nagpur is not a sub-divisional Magistrate and no reference could be made to him under this section.³ A Magistrate located in a division temporarily in the discharge of his public duties will be deemed to have validly referred his proceedings under this section if he submits them to the Magistrate of that division of the district.⁴

12. Procedure of the Magistrate to whom a case is referred. — When proceedings are sent up to a superior Magistrate under this section, the whole case is opened up for him to deal with according to his discretion.¹ He is not, however, bound to hold a trial de novo.² He may act on the evidence recorded by the referring Magistrate and adopt his opinion or he may re-examine the witnesses already examined and take further evidence,³ but in any case he is bound to exercise his independent judgment in the matter and write a judgment according to the provisions of section 367.^{3a}

But the nature of the trial is not altered by the proceedings being submitted under this section.⁴ The superior Magistrate cannot, therefore, convict the accused sent up for an aggravated form of offence.⁵ Nor could he, where the case was triable summarily, pass

Notes 12-14

Where the superior Magistrate examines the accused under sub-section (2), the examination should be reduced to writing as required by section 364.⁷

Where a Magistrate acts irregularly under this section, it is open to the District Magistrate to take the case on his own file or to transfer it to that of some first class Magistrate, the proceedings in either case being taken de novo.⁸

13. "Shall pass such judgment, sentence or order." — The superior Magistrate must form his own judgment and pass sentence on the case referred to him.¹ The opinion of the referring Magistrate that the accused is guilty is not binding on the superior Magistrate and the latter may direct an acquittal or discharge.² But he must not confine himself to merely seeing whether the decision of the referring Magistrate was opposed to the evidence; he must consider whether the evidence is worthy of belief and pass such judgment, sentence or order as he deems proper.³ Such judgment should conform to the requirements of s. 367 of the Code.⁴

The word "order" in sub-s. (2), being associated with the words "judgment" and "sentence," what the section contemplates must be taken to be a final order disposing of the case so far as the Magistrate is concerned.⁵

Notes 14-16

Bench of the High Court of Madras, "the words of the section enabling the Magistrate to pass such judgment, sentence or order, etc., expressly provide for the disposal of the case otherwise than by an acquittal or sentence, . . . and it was quite competent to the Magistrate to whom the case was referred, to say that, either from the gravity of the matter or other sufficient reason, the Sessions Court was the proper tribunal for the disposal of the case, and to make an order in accordance with that opinion."²

The undermentioned cases,³ which held a contrary view were decided under the Codes of 1861 and 1872 and are no longer good law.

15. Whether superior Magistrate can quash proceedings.

— A Magistrate to whom a case is submitted under this section has no power to quash the proceedings of the referring Magistrate and send the case to another Magistrate for re-trial. If he considers that such proceedings are incorrect or illegal he should report them for orders under section 438.¹

16. Whether superior Magistrate can return case. — A Magistrate to whom proceedings are submitted under this section is not at liberty to return the case to the submitting Magistrate, but must dispose of it himself.¹ Where a case was returned by a sub-divisional Magistrate to the submitting Magistrate to pass such sentence as the latter was competent to pass, the conviction and sentence of the latter acting under such order were reversed and the sub-divisional Magistrate directed to dispose of the case himself.² Where, however, the case was returned for committal, although the procedure of the superior Magistrate was held to be incorrect, the committal was allowed to stand by the Madras and Calcutta High Courts as not being illegal.³

The Bombay High Court,⁴ on the other hand, held, in a similar case, that the action of the sub-divisional Magistrate in returning the case to the second class Magistrate was illegal and annulled the order of the superior Magistrate; but nothing was said about the order of committal being illegal.

It has been held in the undermentioned case⁵ that there is nothing illegal in the action of a District Magistrate pointing out that the reference was informal since the inquiry was defective (statements of the accused not having been recorded), and requiring the defect to be supplied before the case was laid before him; and further that the proceedings of the submitting Magistrate being incomplete, he is not precluded, when he has remedied the defects, from coming to a different finding from that previously recorded and acquitting some of the accused whom he had formerly believed to be guilty. On the other hand, where a Magistrate recorded a plea of guilty and submitted the case and the same was returned to him with the remark that in warrant-cases the accused could not be convicted on a mere plea of guilty, it was held that S. 349 does not give the superior Magistrate any power to return the case for supplying omissions and that if there had been any need for taking the accused's defence, the superior Magistrate ought to have done it himself.⁶

17. Transfer to another Magistrate. — The jurisdiction to deal with proceedings under this section is conferred, as has been seen already in Note 11, upon District Magistrates and sub-divisional Magistrates, and upon no other Magistrates. A sub-divisional Magistrate to whom a case is submitted under this section cannot, therefore, transfer it to a Magistrate who is not empowered to act under this section.¹ But he can commit the case to a Court of Session or transfer to a District Magistrate who can act under the section.²

18. Whether superior Magistrate can order re-trial. — It is open to the superior Magistrate to acquit the accused on the charge framed and order a fresh trial before a competent Magistrate under such section as he thinks proper.¹

But a Magistrate should not pass a sentence under S. 349 and then try the accused on another charge arising in the same case. If he

19. Proviso. — When a case is sent up under this section to a District or sub-divisional Magistrate, such Magistrate is not competent to inflict a punishment more severe than what he is empowered to inflict under S. 32 or S. 33.¹

A District Magistrate acting under this section must be regarded as a Magistrate not empowered under S. 30, and hence cannot pass a sentence longer than what he is empowered to pass under S. 32, viz., two years.² Where he does pass a sentence in excess of those powers, an appeal will lie to the Sessions Court under section 408 of the Code and not to the High Court.³

328. Whenever any Magistrate, after having heard part of the evidence in a case, ceases to exercise jurisdiction in such case and is succeeded by another Magistrate who has and who exercises jurisdiction in such case, such last-named Magistrate may decide the case on the evidence partly recorded by his predecessor and partly recorded by himself, or he may re-summon the witnesses and commence afresh :

Convictions on evidence partly recorded by one Magistrate and partly by other.

Provided that the accused person may, when the second Magistrate commences his proceedings, demand that the witnesses shall be re-summoned and re-heard, in which case the trial shall be commenced afresh :

Provided also that any Court of appeal or revision before which the case may be brought, or, in cases tried by Magistrates subordinate to the Magistrate of the District, the Magistrate of the District, without appeal, may set aside any conviction passed on evidence not wholly recorded by the Magistrate before whom the conviction was had, if such Court or Magistrate is of opinion that the accused person has been materially prejudiced thereby; and may order a new trial.

Commitments, on evidence partly recorded by one officer and partly by another, valid.

329. Whenever, from any cause, a Magistrate making an inquiry under chapter XV of this Act is unable to complete the proceedings himself, any other Magistrate having jurisdiction to inquire and to commit may complete the case and proceed as if he had recorded all the evidence himself.

1. Legislative changes.

Code of 1861 — The Code of 1861 contained no corresponding section and hence, when a Magistrate was transferred pending a part-heard case, the same had to be heard de novo.¹ But even under that Code, it was held that in inquiries preliminary to commitment it would be waste of time and vexation to the witnesses to insist on their being examined again in all cases.²

Code of 1872 — Section 323 contemplated cases in which only part of the evidence had been recorded by the outgoing Magistrate; it did not contemplate cases where the whole of the evidence had been recorded by the first Magistrate.³

Notes 1-2

Under the first proviso to S. 328 it would seem that where the accused exercised his option and had the witnesses re-summoned, the trial had to commence afresh.

The case of one Magistrate succeeding another pending an enquiry preliminary to commitment was provided for separately by S. 329 of the Code of 1872.

Code of 1882 — The wording of the section was appropriately altered to cover not only cases where a part of the evidence had been recorded, but also cases where the whole evidence had been recorded by the outgoing Magistrate.

While under the Code of 1872 power to set aside the conviction on the ground of prejudice to the accused was given to all Courts of appeal and revision and to the District Magistrate, S. 350 of the Code of 1882 mentions only the High Court and the District Magistrate having such power.

Act XVIII of 1923 — The words "or in which proceedings have been submitted under S. 349" have been added to sub-s. (2) and this addition makes it clear that such proceedings also are not covered by this section. Sub-section (3) has been added and sets at rest the question whether the provisions of the section applied to cases where the Magistrate ceases to exercise jurisdiction by reason of the transfer of a case from his file. The amendment endorses the view that had been followed already by the majority of Courts, that such cases also come within the scope of the section.

2. Scope and applicability of the section. — It is a general principle of law that only a person who has heard the evidence in the case is competent to decide whether the accused is innocent or guilty.¹ This section is another exception to that rule and has been introduced purely for administrative convenience.^{1a} See also S. 349 Note 2. It is obviously intended to meet the case of transfers of Magistrates from one district to another, and to prevent the necessity of trying from the beginning all cases which may be part-heard at the time of such transfer.² It applies as much to cases in which a Magistrate ceases to exercise jurisdiction by reason of the transfer of a case to another

Court as to cases in which the Magistrate ceases to exercise jurisdiction by reason of his own death or transfer to another post.³

The section is wide enough to cover every trial or enquiry under the Code⁴ and is applicable to summons-cases as well as to warrant-cases.⁵ Its application is, however, limited to Magistrates; the section does not cover trials before Sessions Judges, so that a Sessions Judge is not empowered to try a case in which part of the evidence has not been recorded by himself.⁶ Not even the accused's consent will give the Sessions Judge such jurisdiction.⁷ But where a sessions trial had not begun, but only the preliminary proceedings of swearing in the jury and reading out of the charges to them had been gone through before a change of Judge took place, it was held that the successor could conduct the trial without going through the preliminary proceedings over again.⁸

The application of the section is not confined to the single occurrence of one Magistrate succeeding another as may be suggested by the use of the word "second" in proviso (a). On principle, if a second Magistrate can act on evidence recorded by his predecessor, there seems to be no reason why a third Magistrate should not act on evidence recorded by his predecessors.⁹

Nor is there any distinction between cases where there has been a change of Magistrates in the course of the enquiry in the original Court and cases where the inquiry has been closed by one Magistrate in the original Court by an order of discharge and then re-opened by the Sessions Judge when another Magistrate has succeeded.¹⁰ See also Note 5.

This section does not purport to deal with cases in which process has been issued by a Magistrate who is transferred before the cases come up for hearing. But it has been held that a similar rule must prevail and that if jurisdiction may as a matter of course be exercised by the successor after evidence has begun, there seemed no reason why it should not be exercised where it has not been commenced.¹¹

Where a Magistrate is transferred pending a trial, but the case is also transferred to his file for completion by him, there is no necessity for a de novo trial, there being no change of Magistrates, and the judicial mind brought to bear on the case throughout being the same. Neither this section nor any other provides for such a case.¹²

Similarly, where a Bench of Magistrates consisting of A and B hears a case but the depositions are recorded by A and subsequently the Bench is dissolved and the case is transferred to A alone sitting singly, this section does not apply and he is not bound to re-hear the witnesses already examined by him.^{12a} See also Note 14.

This section does not permit of a commitment by a Magistrate upon evidence recorded partly by himself and partly by a Magistrate who has not ceased to exercise jurisdiction.¹³

Section 328 of the Code of 1872 was more restricted in its scope than the present section, and did not allow of one Magistrate's deciding a case upon evidence wholly recorded by another.¹⁴ But on principles analogous to S. 328, the High Court declined to interfere when the accused was not prejudiced.¹⁵

Where evidence has been recorded wholly or partly by a Magistrate who has no jurisdiction, and the case is then transferred to the file of a Magistrate having jurisdiction, this section does not apply, and such evidence cannot be legally considered by the latter Magistrate; the trial must be held de novo.¹⁶

Notes 2a-3

2a. Applicability of the section to summary trials. — The Nagpur High Court holds that this section applies to summary trials.¹ The opposite view is held by the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court.² The conflict of views arises from the fact that this section applies to cases where the evidence has been recorded wholly or partially by the first Magistrate whereas the recording of evidence is dispensed with under the law in the case of summary trials. According to the Nagpur High Court, notwithstanding this, if evidence is recorded, as a matter of fact, in a particular case, there is no reason why this section should not apply to it. The Sind Court thinks that such evidence does not form part of the record and cannot be taken into consideration under this section.

Where a case is summarily tried by a Magistrate and before the trial is complete the case is transferred to another Magistrate having no power to try cases summarily, the latter Magistrate must commence the trial de novo. The reason is that a case cannot be tried summarily as to a part of it and in the ordinary way as to the rest of it.³

3. "Ceases to exercise jurisdiction." — Where a Magistrate is transferred from one district to another, his jurisdiction ceases in the former district when the transfer takes effect,¹ and he can no longer be held to be the presiding officer of the Court from which he was transferred.² With his transfer his office qua the exercise of jurisdiction in any particular case in which he was engaged is vacated.³

But the words "ceases to exercise jurisdiction therein" do not mean that the Magistrate should have ceased to occupy the particular post, but mean that he should have ceased to exercise jurisdiction in the enquiry or trial.⁴ Thus, the words would apply even to cases where the Magistrate's connexion with a part-heard case is terminated by the transfer of the case to the file of another Magistrate.⁵ See Note 17.

A mere shifting of local areas from the jurisdiction of one Magistrate to that of another does not automatically remove cases from the file of the former, and the former will not automatically cease to have jurisdiction over such cases.⁶

Nor does a Magistrate cease to have jurisdiction in a case merely by absenting himself from a subsequent hearing.⁷

4. "Is succeeded by another Magistrate." — When a new officer is appointed to any magisterial office he becomes the successor of the outgoing Magistrate.¹ Further, when a case is transferred from the file of one Magistrate to that of another, the former is succeeded by the latter in the sense that the latter exercises the jurisdiction over the case which had been exercised by the Magistrate who had begun it.² See Note 17.

On the death of a Magistrate empowered under S. 30 of the Code, the District Magistrate, being the only remaining Magistrate in the district having powers under that section, took upon his file a case which was being tried by the deceased Magistrate. It was held that the District Magistrate must be regarded as having succeeded the deceased within the meaning of this section.³ See also Note 14.

5. "May act on the evidence so recorded." — When the accused persons do not insist upon a re-hearing of the witnesses, a Magistrate succeeding another is entitled to act on the evidence recorded by his predecessor or partly by his predecessor and partly by himself.¹

revision, the Magistrate must hear the evidence over again, are not really restrictive of the scope of S. 350, but are based upon the interpretation therein placed on the words "further inquiry" in S. 436.

But he cannot re-commence the enquiry and at the same time rely upon evidence already recorded.³

A statement of an accused was recorded by a Magistrate who was thereafter transferred. The case was subsequently committed to sessions by his successor. It was held that the statement, though not recorded by the committing Magistrate, could nevertheless, in view of S. 350, be admitted in evidence in the sessions case under S. 287.⁴

6. Delivery of judgment of predecessor. — Section 350 gives a Magistrate jurisdiction under certain circumstances to decide a case upon evidence recorded by his predecessor, but does it give him a jurisdiction to deliver a judgment written by the latter? According to the Calcutta High Court it does not, the reason being that the Magistrate who makes himself responsible for the judgment, must always be the Magistrate who, before delivery thereof, had considered the evidence on record fairly and had also listened to the arguments, if any, of the accused.¹ The Rangoon High Court also agrees with this view but points out that if there is no demand for a new trial by the accused the succeeding Magistrate may take the judgment of his predecessor and compare it with the evidence recorded in the case and if he finds that it expresses what he himself would have decided in the case, he may deliver it as his own judgment.²

The High Court of Madras and the Chief Court of Oudh take the opposite view, viz., that there is no irregularity in a Magistrate's pronouncing the judgment of his predecessor.³ At the same time, the Madras High Court makes it clear that a Magistrate cannot be compelled to pronounce a judgment of his predecessor and thereby adopt it as his own.⁴ The Allahabad High Court has considered the

Notes 6-7

The Madras and Lahore High Courts have held in the cases cited below⁷ that even where the accused demands a re-hearing the Magistrate is entitled to refuse his request and deliver the judgment written by his predecessor. This view proceeds on the ground that the trial must be deemed to have ended on the writing and signing of the judgment by the first Magistrate and the mere pronouncing of the judgment is no part of the trial. But in the undermentioned decision⁸ the Madras High Court considered it very doubtful if a re-hearing could be refused if it was demanded by the accused. The Oudh Chief Court has also held that a re-hearing cannot be refused if it is demanded by the accused on the ground of there having been a change in the Magistrates.^{8a}

There is, however, certainly no provision in the Code for delivery of a judgment written by a Magistrate after he had ceased to have jurisdiction in the district;⁹ a judgment so written is in fact no judgment at all.¹⁰

7. Proviso (a).—The discretion given to a Magistrate by sub-s. (1) to act or not to act in a trial upon evidence recorded by his predecessor is controlled by this proviso.¹ Under this proviso the accused is entitled to demand that witnesses already examined be re-called and re-heard.² As to whether he is entitled to demand that witnesses examined on commission be re-examined, see Note 10a. re-summon witnesses required by the accused is a defect which is not curable by s. 537.³ The Madras High Court has, however, held that proviso (b) applies to such cases and that the proceedings are not vitiated in absence of prejudice.^{3a} But subject to giving effect to this right of the accused the option lies with the Magistrate to start the inquiry or trial all over again or not.⁴ The accused has no right to insist that there shall not be a de novo trial or inquiry and if the Magistrate begins the proceedings anew against the wishes of the accused, the Magistrate's action is not without jurisdiction.⁵ In such a case no question of prejudice to the accused arises.⁶

The proviso does not apply unless the accused asks for a re-hearing⁷ and where a trial is impeached on the ground that a re-hearing was refused, it is insufficient to make a general allegation of such refusal, without any specific allegation as to the date when and the person to whom the application was made, and the order thereon.⁸

The mere fact that at the time of the framing of the charge the accused stated that he did not wish the witnesses to be re-called should not deter the Magistrate's successor from acting under this section,⁹ and if a case is remanded for further inquiry, and in the meanwhile there is a change of Magistrates, the new Magistrate is bound to accede to the accused's request under this proviso, notwithstanding that the remand had been made only for recording further evidence.¹⁰

the order in which they should be examined-in-chief rests with the prosecution.¹⁹

This section in no way affects the provisions of S. 33 of the Evidence Act, and if a de novo trial is conducted, but one of the witnesses cannot be re-summoned because he is dead, his evidence may, nevertheless, be admitted under S. 33 of the Evidence Act.²⁰

8. Application for re-hearing when to be made. — The time when the accused may apply under proviso (a) is when the second Magistrate commences his proceedings; that is, when the case is called on, with the Magistrate on the Bench and the accused in the dock, and the representatives for the prosecution and for the defence (if the accused are defended) are present in the Court for the hearing of the case.¹

The option given to the accused can be exercised by him only once.² An accused who has asked for a re-hearing of the witnesses can change his mind and leave the Court free to exercise its statutory option to act upon the evidence already recorded.³

9. Who can demand de novo trial. — The proviso is entirely in the interests of the accused and it is for him to say who is to be re-summoned and re-heard. The complainant has no privilege under S. 350, and cannot demand a re-hearing.¹

10. Proviso, if applicable to inquiries. — This proviso is limited to criminal trials and is not applicable to inquiries.¹ Thus, it does not apply to inquiries preparatory to a commitment² or to proceedings in warrant-cases before a charge is framed, such proceedings being held to amount only to inquiries.³ The Lahore High Court, however, in the undermentioned case,⁴ seems to hold the view that the proviso is available to an accused even in proceedings prior to the framing of a charge. The Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court has also held that a trial within the meaning of the proviso does not commence with the framing of the charge in warrant-cases but commences when the accused appears or is brought before the Court under S. 252 and that, therefore, the proviso applies even to cases where a charge has not been framed.⁵ The Bombay High Court has also held that 'trial' includes the proceedings before the charge is framed.⁶

As to whether proceedings under chapter VIII of the Code are enquiries or trials within the meaning of this section, there is a difference of opinion. In a Full Bench case of the Madras High Court, Ayling, J., was of opinion that they were only enquiries, while Wallis J., was of the opinion that they were trials.⁷ It was also held in an earlier Calcutta case that there was so much similarity in substance between enquiries into offences and inquiries for taking security that the proviso should be equally applicable to both.⁸ Whether or not the proviso to S. 350 applies suo vigore to proceedings under chapter VIII, it has been definitely held that the proviso is, nevertheless, applicable by virtue of the provisions of S. 117, sub-s.(2).⁹

10a. Witnesses examined on commission — Applicability of proviso. — The object of re-summoning witnesses who have already been examined is that the Magistrate may see their demeanour in the witness-box. A demand for re-summoning cannot therefore be made in the case of a witness who has never been summoned but whose evidence has only been taken on commission.¹ The words "re-summoned and re-heard" in proviso (a) presuppose that the witnesses have been already summoned and heard.²

Where interrogatories had been issued to such a witness and answered by him, in a subsequent de novo trial it is not necessary to issue fresh interrogatories and the answers to the interrogatories already made can be considered as evidence against the accused.³

10b. Proviso, if applies to maintenance proceedings. — The proviso applies only in the case of trials of persons accused of offences alleged to have committed by them. A person against whom proceeding under chapter XXXVI of the Code is taken not being an accused person, the proviso does not apply to such a proceeding.¹ See also Note 5 under S. 488.

11. Duty of Magistrate under proviso (a). — This section does not require that the Magistrate shall ask the accused if he wishes to exercise the right¹ though it would be desirable and proper that the accused should be informed of his rights under the proviso.² But the

12. Re-commence the inquiry or trial. — It may be right to describe a fresh inquiry as a "de novo trial" when a Magistrate suo motu decides to re-commence the trial; but when proviso (a) is brought into force there does not seem to be any question of "de novo trial," the right given to the accused being only to have witnesses re-heard.¹ When the accused exercises this right, the proceedings which had taken place before are not completely wiped out, and it is not necessary for the accused to renew every application which he had made before he claimed the right.² So also the re-summoning of witnesses is not tantamount to recommencing the inquiry and even if the Magistrate, when he re-summoned the witnesses, contemplated re-commencing the enquiry, he is not precluded from changing his mind before he actually recommences the enquiry.³

Whether the Magistrate acts suo motu and grants a de novo trial or accedes to the demand of the accused, his duty is to re-summon and re-hear the witnesses and not merely to allow further cross-examination.⁴ The object in granting a re-hearing is to enable the Magistrate who hears the case to judge of the credibility of the witnesses by their demeanour.⁵ This object is lost if the witnesses are not examined again but only cross-examined.⁶ Failure to examine the witnesses in chief amounts to an illegality which vitiates the trial and the mere fact that the accused acquiesces in the procedure adopted by the Magistrate does not estop him from raising the plea of illegality of the trial.⁷ Where the Magistrate permitted the re-hearing of witnesses but the prosecution declined to examine them again, and the accused without raising any objection only cross-examined those witnesses, it was held that the provisions of S. 350 were not complied with and it was impossible to say that the accused were not prejudiced.⁸ It has, however, been held by the Oudh Chief Court that where the evidence of the witness who is only cross-examined before the second Magistrate has been discarded in arriving at the conclusion, there can be no prejudice to the accused caused by the omission of the prosecution to examine the witness and that the trial is not vitiated.⁹ The undermentioned decision¹⁰ lays down that non-compliance with the demand to have witnesses re-summoned and re-heard will not prejudice the accused when the witnesses are further cross-examined by the Magistrate who decided the case. (But there is a conflict of decisions as to whether non-compliance with accused's demand for re-hearing under proviso (a) is a curable irregularity: see Note 7.) Merely reading their depositions to the witnesses¹¹ or exhibiting them¹² is not re-hearing them.

When a superior Court directs an inquiry by a Magistrate other than the one who originally heard the case, the provisions of S. 350 debar it from directing that the case should be proceeded with from a particular stage.¹³ Where such a direction was made and on the case going back it was found that the original Magistrate had been transferred, it was held that the directions did not apply to his successor.¹⁴ The same may be said of transfers; the operation of S. 350 cannot be checked by any restrictions in the order of transfer.¹⁵ As to instances where the High Court has ordered re-inquiry from a particular stage where the accused undertakes not to ask for a re-trial, see the undermentioned cases.¹⁶ The right of the Magistrate under sub-s. (1) to re-commence the proceedings applies not only to trials but also to cases where the stage of trial has not been reached.¹⁷ It has been held that when a de novo trial is held the prosecution is not bound to examine all the witnesses who were examined at the original trial and that it is open to the prosecution to dispense with the evidence of any witness whom it regards as unreliable.¹⁸

13. From what stage inquiry may be re-commenced. — When a Magistrate succeeding another elects to conduct a de novo trial, he cannot summarily dismiss the complaint under S. 203, it being no longer a question of deciding whether or not proceedings should be taken on the complaint.¹ Nor can he refer the matter to the police under S. 202. The inquiry which he can re-commence is the inquiry as defined in S. 4 which does not include a reference to the police.²

It has been held by the High Court of Madras that a Magistrate who re-commences an inquiry or trial does not thereby modify its nature or the stage at which it has arrived. Thus, where the proceedings re-commenced are only an inquiry, they are re-commenced as an inquiry, and where they have developed into a trial stage they are re-commenced as a trial, i. e., a proceeding in which a charge has been framed; in other words, a charge once framed is not wiped out or cancelled by a de novo trial.³ A similar view has also been taken by the Allahabad High Court in a recent decision.^{3a} The Chief Court of Oudh has held that whatever might be the interpretation as regards cases falling under the first sub-section proper, this principle will apply to cases of re-hearing under proviso (a) and that a charge once framed is not wiped out by granting such a re-hearing.⁴ But the same Court has held in a subsequent case that if the Magistrate frames a new charge the accused cannot have any cause for grievance, inasmuch as under S. 227 (1) a Court can alter or add to any charge at any time before judgment is pronounced.^{4a} The Chief Court of the Punjab appears to be of the same view as the High Court of Madras.⁵ On the other hand, the Nagpur High Court,⁶ the Judicial Commissioner's

Court of Peshawar⁷ and the Chief Court of Lower Burma,⁸ have taken the view that, where a trial is recommenced all the previous proceedings, including the charge framed, are wiped out. The Bombay High Court also held that in warrant-cases where a charge has been framed and the trying Magistrate is succeeded by another Magistrate, the latter can proceed with the case from the beginning and is not bound to recommence the proceedings only from the stage of the charge.⁹

Where a number of accused persons are proceeded against some of whom are discharged, and thereafter the proceedings are transferred to the file of another Magistrate, the order of discharge is not thereby cancelled.¹⁰

14. Case coming again before original Magistrate. — When a Magistrate is transferred and a case which was pending before him is taken up by his successor and the trial started afresh, the proceedings, which had already been taken before the transferred Magistrate are wiped out and such Magistrate has no jurisdiction on the case coming back to his file to proceed with the trial from the point where he himself had left it.¹ But where the second Magistrate has not ordered a new trial, the original Magistrate to whom the case comes back is not bound to grant a de novo trial. To such a case this section does not apply as the Magistrate is not 'another Magistrate'.² See also Note 2.

Government under S. 16, on a difference of opinion between an even number of Honorary Magistrates, a case was referred back to the sub-divisional Officer, it was held that the provisions of this section applied and the sub-divisional Officer could continue the case from the stage at which it was when the transfer to him was made.¹ The Madras High Court has held that where a case is partly tried by a first class Bench under its summary powers and then is transferred to a second class Magistrate having no summary powers, the latter can try it only by means of a complete de novo trial and that this section has no application to the trial by the second class Magistrate subsequent to the transfer of the case to his file.²

15. Proviso (b) — Prejudice to the accused. — A judgment arrived at by a Magistrate upon evidence not wholly recorded by himself is considered by the framers of Code to be of such infirmity that it is liable to be set aside without an appeal, provided that the accused has been actually prejudiced thereby.¹

It does not matter whether the accused did or did not object to the procedure, nor is it necessary to consider whether or not he had a reasonable opportunity of entering a protest thereto; the real question is whether he was prejudiced by the course adopted.² If he was, the conviction will be set aside;³ if he was not, the High Court will refuse to interfere.⁴ See also Note 7.

In a case of defamation it was held that though the Magistrate's deciding the case upon evidence recorded by his predecessor was not without jurisdiction, still it was difficult to see how a Magistrate could adequately decide such a case without having had the complainant examined before him.⁵

Under this proviso a District Magistrate can set aside convictions by Magistrates subordinate to him. This would include first class

Magistrates even though no appeal lies to the District Magistrate from convictions by the former; for, as pointed out in the undermentioned cases⁶ which discussed the meaning of the words "inferior" and "subordinate" occurring in Ss. 435 and 437, S. 17 makes all Magistrates in the district subordinate to the District Magistrate.

See also the undermentioned case.⁷

16. Sub-section (2). — It is a general principle of law that evidence taken by one Magistrate is not evidence in a trial before another, unless some provision of law expressly makes it so. There is nothing in S. 346 enabling a Magistrate to whom the case is referred, to act on the evidence recorded by the referring Magistrate¹ and sub-s. (2) of S. 350 expressly makes the provisions of the section inapplicable to proceedings stayed under S. 346.² Hence, it follows that a Magistrate hearing a case sent to him under S. 346, must hear the same de novo and cannot act on evidence already recorded by the Magistrate who transferred the case.³

Under S. 349 it is in the discretion of the superior Magistrate to whom a case is referred, to act or not to act upon evidence already recorded by the subordinate Magistrate.⁴ The addition of the words "or in which proceedings have been submitted to a superior Magistrate under S. 349" to the sub-section in 1923 makes it clear that nothing in this section will apply to cases submitted under S. 349. The discretion, therefore, that the superior Magistrate has under S. 349, is uncontrolled by the proviso to S. 350 and he cannot, therefore, be compelled to hold a de novo trial.⁵

17. Sub-section (3)—Transfer of cases. — The earlier view was that the provisions of this section did not apply where a change of Magistrates had occurred by a transfer or withdrawal of a case from the file of one Magistrate to that of another.¹ But latterly it

It has been pointed out that, though S. 350 is applicable to cases transferred or withdrawn from the file of one Magistrate to that of another, it is desirable that the second Magistrate should commence the hearing de novo.⁴

throughout the trial, the judgment would be perfectly valid though some other Magistrates had also been present at the earlier stages of the trial;¹ but there was a difference of opinion on the question whether a judgment delivered by a Bench of Magistrates some of whom had not heard the whole of the evidence could be considered to be a valid judgment. According to one view the fundamental principle of law is that no person who has not heard the whole of the evidence is competent to pass or take part in passing the judgment in the case, and that a judgment so passed is a nullity.^{1a} Another view was that the only question in each case was whether the accused was prejudiced by the course adopted.² In this view it was held that a Government Notification under S. 16, clause (c), which provided that "if any case is adjourned and the members at the adjourned sessions are not the same as sat at the first hearing of the case, the provisions of S. 350 of the Criminal Procedure Code will be held to apply to the case," was not ultra vires.³ A third view was that such a Government Notification was ultra vires of the powers of the Local Government under S. 16, clause (c).⁴

The present section now makes it clear that no change in the constitution of the Bench during the progress of a trial will affect the validity of the judgment passed, provided—

Section 350A

firstly, that the Bench by which the judgment is passed is duly constituted, and secondly, that the Magistrates constituting the same (i. e., the Bench which passed the judgment) have been present on the Bench throughout the proceedings.

2. "Duly constituted under sections 15 and 16." — A Bench of Magistrates will be "duly constituted under Ss. 15 and 16" if—

- (1) the individuals sitting as a Bench have all been authorized by the Provincial Government under S. 15 to sit together as a Bench, and
- (2) the number of such individuals is not less than the quorum fixed by rules framed by the Provincial Government under S. 16, clause (c).

Suppose that A, B, C, D and E, are all authorized under rules framed under S. 15 to sit together as a Bench, and under the rules framed under S. 16, clause (c), the quorum for a valid Bench is declared to be two. If now A, B and C sit together to hear a case, but C is absent during subsequent hearings thereof and A and B finally deliver judgment in the case, the judgment is perfectly valid notwithstanding the change in the personnel of the Bench in the course of the trial, inasmuch as A and B form a duly "constituted" Bench (i. e. they form the necessary quorum) and they have been present throughout the proceedings.¹ In Chiteshwar Dube v. Emperor,^{1a} Niamatullah, J., however, took the view that all the Magistrates who began to hear the case must be present at all the hearings irrespective of the quorum in order to render the ultimate judgment valid. This view was dissented from by a Bench of the same High Court in Dasrath Rai v. Emperor;² but Sulaiman, C. J., in the latter case, observed as follows: "It is not easy to see how the constitution of the Bench can be changed and at the same time the Magistrates constituting the Bench be present on the Bench throughout the proceedings." In making this observation his Lordship does not appear to have laid the necessary emphasis on the words "duly constituted" used in the section. A Bench may be constituted by several Magistrates appointed under S. 15, and there may be a change in the constitution of such Bench. But if the duly constituted Bench under S. 16, i. e., the quorum fixed, passes the judgment, it would be valid provided the Magistrates constituting such quorum have been present on the Bench throughout the proceedings.

351.* (1) Any person attending a Criminal Court, although not under arrest or upon a summons, may be detained by such Court for the purpose of inquiry into or trial of any offence of which such Court can take cognizance and which, from the evidence, may appear to have been committed, and may be proceeded against as though he had been arrested or summoned.

(2) When the detention takes place in the course of an inquiry under Chapter XVIII or after a trial has been begun, the proceedings in respect of such person shall be commenced afresh, and the witnesses re-heard.

1. Scope of the section. — The following conditions are necessary for the application of the section :—

- (1) An offence must appear to have been committed on the evidence in the case before the Court,
- (2) such offence must be one of which the Court can take cognizance, and
- (3) the person who appears to have committed the offence must be present in Court.¹

This section does not by itself confer any power of taking cognizance of the offence disclosed in the evidence. It only prescribes the procedure to be followed when an offence of which the Court can take cognizance is disclosed on the evidence in the case.

The ordinary procedure where any person is to be proceeded against for any offence judicially is to issue a process against him. This section is an exception to this general rule and enables the Court to, at once, detain the offender in custody without issuing any such process.

As to the principle on which cognizance is taken in such cases, see Notes 3, 5 and 10 to section 190.

There is, however, nothing in the Code which states that a Magistrate is bound at any stage of a trial, to stop the proceedings, arrest any person against whom he thinks there is a chance of getting a conviction, and start the original trial de novo.² As to the considerations to be borne in mind in exercising the discretion under this section, see the undermentioned cases.³

1a. Courts to be open. — It is a fundamental principle of law and procedure that every Court of Justice should be open to every subject of the King. As was observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in *McPherson v. McPherson*¹:

"Publicity is the authentic hall-mark of judicial as distinct from administrative procedure The actual presence of the public is never of course necessary. Where Courts are held in remote parts of the Province, as they frequently must be, there may be no members of the public available to attend. But even so the Court must be open to any who may present themselves for admission."

The proviso to this section, however, permits the presiding Judge or Magistrate to hold a trial in camera, if he thinks fit: see Note 5.

1. Evidence of pardanashin lady. — See Note 6 under Section 503.

2. Trial in jail. — Trial in jail is not illegal when there is nothing to show that admittance was refused to anyone who desired it.¹ It is within the discretion of the Magistrate to hold a trial at a place other than the court-house. But where he decides to hold the trial in the jail premises he should pass a formal order directing that the trial

Such an order must invariably be passed, as otherwise if accused persons consider that they have a grievance in any matter, it would be difficult for them, in the absence of a formal order, to have recourse to higher authorities for redress. The absence of such a formal order is an irregularity.²

3. Exclusion of police-officer. — This section empowers the Court to order that a particular person shall not remain in the room used by the Court. It makes no exception in the case of a police-officer. When the accused person objects to the presence of a police-officer or other person, the Magistrate has to decide whether the accused's fear of prejudice to his case is reasonable, considering the intelligence and susceptibilities of the class to which he belongs and not merely whether the presence is convenient or helpful to the Court or the prosecution.¹

4. Holding Court in a private place. — To hold a Court in a private house, in spite of the protests from the accused and where he cannot get his pleader to attend or call his witnesses, is a material irregularity.¹ But where a case is tried in a Magistrate's private room instead of in the court-room without any objection by the parties, the trial is not illegal.²

Where a private place belonging to the Judge is turned into a court-room, such a place cannot be said to be "in the possession" of the Judge within the meaning of S. 441 of the Penal Code. Thus, where an accused entered the private room of the Judge, wherein a trial was proceeding, and even when asked to leave it, disobeyed the order, it was held that the accused could not be convicted under S. 448 of the Penal Code.³

5. Trial in camera. — The proviso to this section empowers the presiding Judge or Magistrate to hold a trial in camera if he thinks fit. Where he conducts a trial in camera in the exercise of his discretion and no objection is raised to such procedure, the proceedings cannot be upset unless one of the parties can be shown to have been in fact prejudiced.¹

1. Legislative changes.

There is no difference between the corresponding sections of the Codes of 1861 and 1872.

Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882 —

- (1) The corresponding provision of the Code of 1872 applied to primarily inquiries in cases triable by a Court of Session (now chapter XVIII) and was applied by another provision to warrant-cases (now chapter XXI). Section 353 of the Code of 1882 made the provision applicable, also, to trials and inquiries under chapters XX, XXII and XXIII.
- (2) Under the Codes of 1861 and 1872 this provision applied only to the evidence of the complainant and the prosecution witnesses. Under the Code of 1882 this provision applied to all evidence.

Code of 1898 —

There is no difference between the Codes of 1882 and 1898.

2. Scope and applicability of the section. — It is a general principle of law that all evidence in inquiries and trials should be taken in the presence of the accused. There are various provisions of the Code by which the presence of the accused may, under certain circumstances, be dispensed with. (See ss. 205 and 540A.) This section requires that, in such cases, the evidence shall be taken in the presence of his pleader.¹

The general rule stated in this section is, however, not applicable where there is an express provision to the contrary. Thus, an appellate Court may, under S. 428, sub-s. (3), direct that the accused need not be present when additional evidence is taken. Similarly, where an accused person has absconded, the Court may, in his absence, take evidence under S. 512. Again, when witnesses are examined on commission under the provisions in chapter XL, the accused need not be present.

Under ss. 32 and 33 of the Evidence Act, the statements of persons who cannot be called as witnesses are admissible in evidence.^{1a} Under ss. 509 and 510 of this Code, the deposition of a medical witness and his report and the report of a chemical examiner are admissible in evidence without the medical officer or the chemical examiner being called. Similarly, under the Extradition Act, 1870 the deposition or statements on oath taken in a foreign State may, if duly authenticated, be received in evidence.² These provisions, however, are all exceptions to the general rule of evidence that all evidence should be direct (see S. 60, Evidence Act) and have no bearing on this section.

3. "All evidence." — The words "all evidence" will include the evidence for the defence as well as evidence for the prosecution.¹ See also Note 1.

As to whether the name, parentage, age, residence and profession given in the heading of the deposition form part of the deposition, see the undermentioned cases.²

4. "Shall be taken in the presence of the accused." — The section is imperative that all evidence shall be taken in the presence of the accused, or in certain circumstances, in the presence of his pleader. It is not sufficient under the section to read out to a witness his previous deposition in a former case and ask him if the statements made therein are true;¹ nor is it sufficient to read out to the accused

1. Legislative changes.

Difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872 —

The provisions of the corresponding section in the Code of 1861 applied only to summons-cases. The Code of 1872 extended the provisions also to cases of the kind referred to in section 222 of that Code (now section 260).

Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882 —

The words "otherwise than at a summary trial" after the words "Magistrate of the first or second class," occurring in the Code of 1872 were omitted in S. 355 of the Code of 1882, as they were thought to be redundant, since those words already occurred in section 354.

Difference between the Codes of 1882 and 1898 —

- (1) The words "clauses (b) to (m)" were substituted for "clauses (b) to (k)," in consequence of offences added in section 260.
- (2) The provisions of this section have been extended also to proceedings under section 514.

2. Scope of the section. — There are three different kinds of procedure prescribed by the Code in the matter of recording of evidence in the trial of cases :

- (1) In summary trials (ss. 260 to 265) no evidence need be recorded by the Magistrate.¹

Section 355

- (2) In regular trials of summons-cases by a Magistrate other than a Presidency Magistrate and of cases of offences mentioned in S. 260, clauses (b) to (m), and in proceedings under S. 514, the Magistrate shall make a memorandum of the substance of the evidence of each witness as his examination proceeds (S. 355). In such cases, however, under S. 358 it is open to the Magistrate, if he thinks fit, to take down the evidence of the witnesses in the manner provided by S. 356 or S. 357.
- (3) In regular trials of cases not falling within this section, the procedure prescribed by ss. 356 to 365 should be followed.

3. Sub-section (1) of section 260, clauses (b) to (m). — Section 351 makes it clear that this and the following sections do not apply to summary trials.¹ Thus, it does not apply to cases of the offences specified in sub-s. (1) of S. 260, clauses (b) to (m), if tried summarily, and therefore in such cases the Magistrate is not bound to make any memorandum of the substance of the evidence of each witness. Even if he makes such a memorandum, the notes do not form part of the record.² But, if the Magistrate does not try the offences under the provisions of S. 260 but tries them in the ordinary course, he is required under this section to make a memorandum of the evidence.³ The High Court of Calcutta has, however, held that such memorandum, if taken, would form part of the record and cannot be destroyed by the Magistrate.⁴ An offence of theft under ss. 379, 380 and 281, I. P. C., where the value of the property stolen does not exceed Rs. 50, is one falling under S. 260, Cl. (d), and when tried regularly, is governed by this section.⁵ But a charge of theft under the said sections combined with a charge of previous conviction for a similar offence has been held to be a different offence not falling within clause (d). Neither a summary procedure nor this section will apply to such a case.⁶

5. ('36) AIR 1936 All 319 (319): 37 Cri L Jour 710, Hafiz Mohd. Rafiq Ahmad v. Emperor. (A Magistrate trying summary case in ordinary way is not required to record the evidence in the language of the Court or have it so recorded.)

4. "Shall make a memorandum of the substance of the evidence." — This section requires only a memorandum to be made of the substance of the evidence given. Such a memorandum should not, however, be inadequate or vague,¹ but must be full.²

The Code is silent as to the language in which such a memorandum is to be recorded; consequently, if a subordinate Magistrate, not authorized to take down evidence in English, records the memorandum of the substance of such evidence in English, there is nothing illegal in it.³

The memorandum under this section need not be read over to the witnesses inasmuch as it is not evidence proper. Section 360 does not apply to such cases.⁴

5. "Each witness." — The direction of the section that the Magistrate must make "a memorandum of the substance of the evidence of each witness," is not complied with by a mere statement that a witness deposed exactly as another.¹ See also section 356.

6. "Signed by the Magistrate." — It was held in the under-mentioned case¹ that an omission by the Magistrate to sign the memorandum of the substance of the evidence recorded by him vitiated the trial. But in view of the decision of the Privy Council in Abdul Rahman v. Emperor,² the failure of the Magistrate merely to sign the memorandum cannot be regarded as sufficient by itself to vitiate the conviction.³

7. Reasons for inability to record as required. — Sub-section (3) requires that the Magistrate must make a memorandum of the substance of the evidence with his own hand, unless he records valid reasons for not doing so. He is not entitled to attend to other work during the hearing of the case and to plead that other work as the reason for his inability to comply with this requirement.¹

1. Legislative changes. — Change made in 1923 — Sub-s.(2A) was newly added, by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, XVIII of 1923.

2. Scope of the section. — Section 355 provides for the manner in which evidence is to be recorded in certain specified cases. This section provides for the manner of recording of evidence in all other trials before Magistrates and Courts of Session and in all inquiries under chapters XII¹ and XVIII. This section applies only to cases to which the provisions of S. 355 do not apply.²

3. "In all other trials." — See Note 2.

4. Proceedings for security for good behaviour.—An inquiry in a proceeding for demanding security for good behaviour should, under the provisions of S.117, be conducted and evidence recorded as in warrant-cases. The manner in which evidence is to be recorded in warrant-cases is that prescribed by this section and, consequently, evidence in inquiries under S.117, on an order for security for good behaviour, should be taken in the manner prescribed by this section.¹

5. Record of evidence—Sub-section (1).—Under this section the entire evidence must be recorded fully,¹ either by the Magistrate himself or by somebody else under his direction and in his presence, in the language of the Court. This provision is mandatory and an omission to record the evidence in the manner provided is a material irregularity sufficient to set aside the proceedings.^{1a} But where evidence is recorded but not in the language of the Court, the defect is merely an irregularity and not an illegality which would vitiate the trial. The essence of the rule contained in sub-s. (1) is the taking down in writing of the evidence of each witness and not the taking down in writing of the same in the language of the Court as is shown by the provisions of S. 357 under which, if the Provincial Government so directs, the evidence may be taken down in the mother tongue of the Judge or in English.² So, where the error is only one of procedure and does not go to the root of the trial and neither causes prejudice to the accused nor occasions a failure of justice, it is cured by S. 537.³

Generally speaking where evidence is given by a witness in his own language, the vernacular record is always more reliable and entitled to greater weight than the memorandum which the Judge makes in English.⁴ Where, however, the deposition taken down in the language of the Court is destroyed and the memorandum in English made by the Magistrate under sub-s. (3) is very full and careful, a conviction based on such a memorandum is not invalid.⁵

6. Evidence of each witness shall be taken. — Taking down evidence means taking down the statement of a witness in full as he deposes. Therefore, where a Magistrate, in recording the evidence of a medical witness, instead of taking down his statements, simply recorded that the injuries on the accused were fully detailed in the medical certificate, the procedure is improper.¹ The evidence of each witness must be taken as the examination proceeds; and this requirement is not complied with by a mere record that a witness “deposes as the last witness did”² or “corroborates” another witness.³

The practice of recording evidence piece-meal and not at a stretch is highly irregular.⁴

7. Language of the Court.—The language of the Court is that determined by the Provincial Government under S. 558.

8. Shall be signed. — The presiding officer of the Court must sign the deposition of the witness examined by him. The object is to ensure the accuracy of the record.¹

Where the Court is composed of more than one Judge, it is not necessary that all the Judges should sign the deposition. It is enough if the presiding Judge signs it.²

There is no provision of law which makes it obligatory on the Court to attest the deposition in the presence of the accused, though it is desirable that the depositions should be taken and attested in the presence of the accused and a few apt words written on the face of the deposition to make it apparent that this has been done.³ See S. 509 which makes such a thing obligatory for the purpose of that section.

The signature of the deponent is not made compulsory though it is desirable that such signatures also should be obtained. A refusal to sign a deposition, however, is not an offence under S. 180 of the Penal Code.⁴

9. Record of oath.—There is nothing in the Code or elsewhere which requires a Court examining a witness to record the fact that the oath was administered to him. Where the record does not show that the oath was administered to a witness, the reasonable presumption, in the absence of any suggestion to the contrary, would be that proper procedure was followed and the oath duly administered.¹

10. Sub-section (2A). — This sub-section was newly added in 1923. The reason is thus stated in the Statement of Objects and Reasons:

“Section 356 does not provide for evidence being taken down in any other language than that of the Court, or, if the language of the Court is not English, in English. The result is a certain loss of accuracy, whenever evidence is given in a third language, as it has to be translated into and taken down in the language of the Court or in English. The object of the amendment is to secure greater accuracy and to avoid waste of time in translation.”¹

11. Sub-section (3). — The provisions of this sub-section apply only to cases in which the evidence recorded under sub-s. (1) is not recorded in the Magistrate's own hand.¹ It is supplementary to the provisions in sub-s. (1) and cannot override the provisions therein.² Where, therefore, there is only a memorandum in English, and such a memorandum is not made as the examination of each witness is proceeding and it is not signed by the Judge, the irregularity is so serious that the conviction will be quashed.³ But where the evidence is recorded in the language of the Court and the Magistrate does not make a memorandum in English, the failure is only an irregularity which is curable by section 537.⁴

The Calcutta High Court has suggested in the undermentioned case⁵ that provisions should be made for recording full and accurate shorthand notes of proceedings at sessions trials.

12. Sub-section (4). — The Magistrate or the Sessions Judge, when he does not himself take down the evidence in writing, is bound, under sub-s. (3) to make a memorandum of the substance of the evidence and this must be written and signed by the Magistrate with his own hand unless he is prevented from doing so, in which case he must, under sub-s. (4), record the reason of his inability to make it. Pressure

357.* (1) The Provincial Government^a may direct that in any district or part of a district, or in proceedings before any Court of Session, or before any Magistrate or class of Magistrates the evidence of each witness shall, in the cases referred to in section 356, be taken down by the Sessions Judge or Magistrate with his own hand and in his mother-tongue, unless he is prevented by any sufficient reason from taking down the evidence of any witness, in which case he shall record the reason of his inability to do so and shall cause the evidence to be taken down in writing from his dictation in open Court.

(2) The evidence so taken down shall be signed by the Sessions Judge or Magistrate, and shall form part of the record :

1. Scope of the section. — This section applies only to evidence taken under S. 356.¹ The authority conferred under this section is personal to the particular officer on whom it is conferred and is in force only while he is in the district or part of the district in which it is conferred.² But where such an officer is transferred to another district and he takes down depositions in his own handwriting without authority for that district, and commits the accused, the commitment, although irregular, is not invalid unless the accused is prejudiced thereby.³

358.* In cases of the kind mentioned in section 355, the Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, take down the evidence of any witness in the manner provided in section 356, or, if within the local limits of the jurisdiction of such Magistrate the Provincial Government^a has made the order referred to in section 357, in the manner provided in the same section.

1. "If he thinks fit." — Even in cases of the kind specified in S. 355, the Magistrate may take down the evidence in the manner mentioned in S. 356 if he thinks fit to do so, as for example, where it appears that a witness is giving false evidence and that it is likely to be necessary to start criminal proceedings against him.

359.† (1) Evidence taken under section 356 or section 357 shall not ordinarily be taken down in the form of question and answer, but in the form of a narrative.

Mode of recording evidence under section 356 or section 357.

(2) The Magistrate or Sessions Judge may, in his discretion, take down, or cause to be taken down, any particular question and answer.

1. Scope of the section. — This section prescribes the mode of recording evidence under Ss. 356 and 357. It directs that the evidence shall ordinarily be taken down in the form of a narrative. In doing so, the Judge should adhere, as far as possible, to the words actually used either in the question or in the answer given by the witness. The provisions of law cannot be said to be complied with by recording a paraphrase of the evidence given by the witness.¹ The ordinary, proper and convenient way of recording the evidence is to take it down in the first person, exactly as spoken by the witness.²

The Judge is not bound to make verbatim record of any particular question and answer. It is left to the discretion of the Judge, if either side specially requests him to do so.

A Judge may also himself question the witness and record his question and answer under S.165 of the Evidence Act, but this power should be exercised with discretion and within limits as it is unfair to the accused to anticipate or break the thread of his cross-examination.³

2. Recording of questions disallowed. — Sections 356 to 360 do not require that when a Magistrate disallows questions in cross-examination he must make a note of this on the record. It has been held that if the Magistrate notes on the record each question that is disallowed, the procedure defeats its own object which is to get on with the case, but when a question disallowed is important, or there is a reasonable doubt whether it should not be allowed, it may be useful for the Magistrate to note the question and his reasons for disallowing it. This is, however, entirely a matter for the discretion of the Magistrate.¹ A contrary view has however been taken in the undermentioned cases² to the effect that if a question is disallowed on the ground of irrelevancy or on other grounds, the deposition should show what the question is and the reason for disallowing it.

1. Legislative changes.

There was no difference between the corresponding sections of the Codes of 1861 and 1872.

Difference between the Codes of 1872, 1882 and 1898 —

- (1) The words "or of his agent, when his personal attendance is dispensed with and he appears by agent" were replaced in the 1882 Code by the words "or of his pleader."
- (2) Section 339 of the Code of 1872, provided that the witness "may require his evidence to be interpreted to him." The Code of 1882 and the present Code provide that the evidence "shall be interpreted to him."

2. Scope and applicability of the section. — Sections 356 and 357 prescribe the manner of taking evidence in the cases mentioned therein. This section enacts the procedure to be followed after the evidence is completed. The evidence should be read over to the witness or interpreted to him if it has been taken down in a language which the witness does not understand. Such reading over or interpretation should be done in the presence of the accused or of his pleader if the accused appears by pleader.

The object of the provision is to obtain an accurate record from the witness of what he really means to say and to give him an opportunity of correcting the words which the Magistrate or his clerk has taken down.¹ It is not to enable the accused or his advocate to suggest corrections.² See also Note 4.

The section applies also to proceedings before Commissioners under the Defence of India Act, 1915.³

3. Shall be read over to the witness — Sub-section (1). — Under S. 199 of the Code of 1861 it was necessary that a memorandum should be signed and attached to the deposition of each witness to the effect that the evidence was read over to him and that he acknowledged the same to be correct.¹ This provision has not been enacted in the present Code. It is, therefore, not imperative, though desirable, under the present Code that a record be made by the Magistrate that the deposition was read over to the witness in the presence of the accused.²

It was held in the undermentioned cases³ that the section is mandatory and not merely directory and the evidence of a witness must be read over to him in the presence of the accused or of his pleader, though it may take a considerable time to do so. The view that this section is mandatory cannot however, be said to be correct after the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Abdul

Rahman v. Emperor,⁴ in which it has been held that the provisions of this section are not absolutely prohibitory and that a non-compliance with the section is curable under S. 537 when it is unaccompanied by any probable suggestion of any failure of justice having been thereby occasioned. It is not a sufficient compliance with the section to merely hand over to the witness his deposition so that he may read it over himself.⁵ It was held in the undermentioned cases⁶ that it would not be a compliance with the section if the evidence is read over to the witness while another witness is being examined, the reason being that the accused cannot at one and the same time listen to the evidence that is being read over and to the evidence of a fresh witness that is being recorded. On this question their Lordships of the Privy Council have held in Abdul Rahman v. Emperor above cited, that although it will be a better course if depositions other than mere formal ones were read over so that the accused or his pleader could hear them and give his undivided attention to them, yet it would be no violation of the provisions of this section if the deposition of one witness is read over while other stages of the case are proceeding, as "the primary object is to fix the witness and to enable him to protect himself against any inaccuracy in the words taken down from his lips."

4. In the presence of the accused or of his pleader. — The evidence must be read over in the presence of the accused, if he is in attendance, or of his pleader. Where, however, there are several accused in the case, the evidence of a witness read over in the presence of the pleader of one only of such accused is not inadmissible in a case of perjury against such witness, merely because it was not read over in the presence of all the other accused or their pleaders.¹

It is only where the accused "appears by a pleader" that a reading over of the evidence in the presence of such pleader is sufficient.² The words "if he appears by a pleader" cannot be restricted to cases in which a pleader is allowed to represent one accused whose personal attendance has been dispensed with. The natural meaning of the words is that if an accused person has engaged a pleader, who is in attendance, the reading over of the deposition in his presence will be a full compliance with the provisions of this section.³

The evidence must be read over only in the presence of the accused or of his pleader. It is not necessary that it should be within their hearing. The reason is that the accused is only entitled to be sure that the evidence has been read over, and that the witness has had an opportunity of correcting the written words. But he is not necessarily entitled to the opportunity of suggesting corrections.⁴

Does this section apply to proceedings under chapter XII of the Code? It has been held by a Full Bench of the High Court of Calcutta that the persons proceeded against under that chapter are not "accused" persons, but that the first clause of this section should be read as meaning that the evidence is to be read over in the presence of the accused if there is one and that, therefore, the evidence should be read over to the witness in such proceeding though not in the presence of the persons proceeded against.⁵ The High Court of Patna has come to the same conclusion.⁶

5. "As the evidence of each witness . . . is completed." —

The evidence of each witness must be read over to him immediately after it is completed. The section is not complied with if the deposition is read over at the end of the day after all the witnesses are examined.¹ Where a Magistrate examined a number of witnesses and asked them to be in a room and then had the depositions read over to them, it was held that the procedure was illegal and not merely irregular.² Again, the section is not complied with if the evidence is read out as each sentence of it is being recorded. It must be read out only after it is completed.³ But where the evidence is read over to a witness some days after his examination-in-chief but immediately after his cross-examination, it was held that this section was sufficiently complied with.⁴

Section 360

6. "And shall, if necessary, be corrected." — Before a deposition is closed, a witness should be given an opportunity of explaining and correcting any contradictions which it may contain.¹

7. Shall be interpreted to the witness. — Under the Codes of 1861 and 1872, when the evidence was taken down in a language different from that in which it was given, the witness might require that his evidence should be interpreted to him.¹ Under this Code it is obligatory on the Court in all such cases, whether the witness requires it or not, to interpret his evidence to him. It is, however, not necessary to first read out the deposition to the witness in the language in which it is taken and then to interpret it to him. It is sufficient if it is merely interpreted to him.²

Should the evidence in such cases be interpreted to the accused? In Abdul Rahman v. King-Emperor,³ their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows :

"The distinction between S. 360 and S. 361 is very marked. Under the latter section, if evidence is given in a language not understood by the accused or his pleader, it is to be interpreted into their language, while under the former section, when it is read over, it is to be interpreted to the witness in his own language; but there is no provision for its being interpreted to the accused. Thus, if the depositions are taken down in English, and the language of the accused is Hindi, and the language of a witness is Burmese, . . . the depositions will have to be taken by getting the witness's answers in Burmese, having them interpreted to the Court so that they may be taken down in English, and further interpreted to the accused, so that he may understand them, in Hindi. When, however, the deposition comes to be read over, as it will be, in English, it will be interpreted to the witness in Burmese, but not to the accused in Hindi; and if the accused knew neither English nor Burmese, he will be none the wiser."

As to whether a sworn interpreter is necessary for interpreting the evidence to the witness, see S. 543, Note 1.

8. Non-compliance with the section — Effect of. — It has now been settled by the Privy Council that non-compliance with the strict provisions of this section is only an irregularity which is cured by S. 537 of the Code in the absence of prejudice.¹ Thus, a failure to

There is a conflict of opinion as to whether the witness can be prosecuted on the basis of evidence, the procedure regarding which has not been followed as laid down in this section. On the one hand, it has been held that non-compliance with the section renders the evidence inadmissible under the Evidence Act, that no other evidence can be admitted by virtue of the provisions of s. 91 thereof, and that, therefore, a conviction on such evidence cannot be sustained.³ A contrary view has, on the other hand, been taken in the undermentioned cases⁴ to the effect that non-compliance with the section does not render the evidence inadmissible but only prevents a presumption being raised as to its correctness under S.80 of the Evidence Act. In view of the decision of the Privy Council in Abdul Rahman v. King-Emperor,⁵ that non-compliance with the section is not fatal to the conviction, it is submitted that the latter view is correct. See S.476 Note 11.

Where the accuracy of the deposition was challenged and it was clear that a relevant statement of a witness was omitted from the record which was not read over to the witness, it was held that the conviction should be quashed.⁶

The absence of a memorandum subjoined to a deposition, and stating the fact of compliance with the section, does not of itself prove that the provisions of this section have not been complied with.⁷

As to the witness's liability to be proceeded against for perjury, see S.193 of the Penal Code and S.476 Note 11.

9. Revision.—The question whether a deposition was read over to the witness in accordance with this section is one of fact and cannot be raised for the first time in revision before the High Court.¹

1. Scope of the section.—This section enacts that in appealable cases Presidency Magistrates should take down the evidence of witnesses in their own hand, or cause it to be taken down, in open Court to their dictation. They are also required to make a memorandum of the substance of the examination of the accused in such cases. In other cases, i. e., non-appealable cases, they need not record any evidence, or even frame a charge.

This section does not apply to cases under section 110, where it becomes necessary to make a reference to the High Court, in regard to the sentence of imprisonment.¹

2. Record of evidence in appealable cases.—In cases coming under S. 362, sub-s. (1), i. e., in appealable cases, the Magistrate is bound to record the evidence with his own hand or cause it to be taken down in writing from his dictation in open Court. In doing so, it is the duty of the Magistrate to take note of all the material facts, whether they appear in the examination-in-chief or in the course of cross-examination.¹

Before the amendment of 1923, sub-s. (1) applied to cases in which the Magistrate imposed a fine of Rs. 200, or imprisonment for a period exceeding six months. The taking of evidence precedes the sentence, and it is on the evidence given that the sentence is based. Therefore, the language was clearly faulty as it is unreasonable to suppose that the Magistrate should make up his mind as to the sentence he would pass, before the evidence was recorded.² This defect of language was noticed, and in regard to it, the Select Committee of 1916 observed :

"We think that the opening words of sub-s. (1) of S. 362 require amendment. As the section stands, it seems to imply that a Presidency Magistrate before he commences his enquiry must make up his mind as to the maximum limit of the sentence he will impose. We think that the sub-section would read better as amended by us ; compare the wording of S. 264."

The amendment made is that in cases in which an appeal lies, the Presidency Magistrate shall either record the evidence himself, or have it recorded. It is not clear how the defect of language noticed above has been remedied by the amendment. If the section as it stood before the amendment implied that the Magistrate should make up his mind as to the maximum limit of sentence he would pass, the same implication still continues, for, under S. 411, only a sentence of imprisonment for more than six months and a fine exceeding Rs. 200 are appealable. In short, to make up his mind to award an appealable sentence is to make up his mind as to the maximum limit of the sentence he would pass. In regard to this criticism, the Select Committee in 1922, observed :

"We are inclined to agree with those critics who point out that the re-draft proposed in sub-s. (1) of S. 362 does not get rid of the difficulty that a Magistrate has to make up his mind as to the sentence he will impose before he begins trying the case. We cannot see how this difficulty can be got rid of ; but we think that the amendment proposed has the advantage of bringing the language of this section into conformity with the language of Ss. 263 and 264 and we would, therefore, retain this sub-clause."

Apart from the uniformity of the language, it is not clear what "advantage" is gained by using language similar to that in Ss. 263 and 264. It must in this connexion be noted, that the language in S. 264 is appropriate and presents no difficulties similar to those in S. 362 (1), for a judgment does usually precede the sentence. It is the language in S. 263 that presents difficulties similar to those in S. 362 (1) and in regard to it, it was observed :

"It may be difficult for a Magistrate to determine at the initial stage whether he will or will not pass an appealable sentence. In such a case the course he has to adopt is to make a memorandum of the evidence of each witness as the examination of the witness proceeds. If, on the other hand, even at the initial stage he can make up his mind that in any event the sentence to be passed by him will not be appealable, he need not record the evidence."³ to be passed, his course is to record the evidence afresh.⁴ This happens generally in cases where after he has convicted the accused, he is informed for the first time that the accused is an old criminal with many previous convictions. In such cases it has been held that though the prosecution should not inform the Magistrate about previous convictions, they may indicate to the Magistrate that they think that the case is one in which it is desirable that the evidence should be recorded, so as to avoid recording of evidence afresh.⁵

3. Record of evidence in non-appealable cases. — Sub-section (4) was newly introduced in 1923. The section as it stood before 1923 having provided the procedure to be adopted in appealable cases only, there was uncertainty as to the procedure to be followed in non-appealable cases.¹ It was held by the High Court of Calcutta in the undermentioned case² that it was left to the discretion of the Magistrate to record or not, evidence in such cases and that the High Court felt unable to prescribe a procedure which the law did not render obligatory. In another case³ the same High Court remarked that though the Magistrate was not bound to record evidence in such cases, it was desirable that he should keep some record of the statements made by witnesses or that their judgments should indicate what the statements were, so that the High Court may judge as a Court of revision of the propriety or legality of the orders passed by them. A similar view was expressed in the undermentioned cases also.⁴

In *Emperor v. Harischandra*⁵ the High Court of Bombay held that the Magistrate had a discretion to take evidence or not in such cases, but that such discretion had to be exercised reasonably and not arbitrarily; it was observed:

"But the discretion like all discretionary powers, should be exercised judicially, in a reasonable spirit and not arbitrarily. For instance, in cases of petty offences, such as 'nuisances' or what are called in police parlance 'morning cases,' there may be no necessity to record any evidence. But in a case of this kind, where an educated man holding a comparatively respectable status in life is charged with an offence reflecting on his character and serious allegations are levelled against him, there ought to have been some record of evidence to enable him in a case of conviction to come up to this Court in revision and satisfy it that the conviction is wrong."

This view was adopted by the same High Court in the under-mentioned cases⁶ which arose after the introduction of sub-s.(4) of this section. In D'Souza v. Emperor,⁷ however, the said view was dissented from. Beaumont, C. J., observed as follows:

"Section 362 is perfectly plain; it says that in cases which are not appealable, it shall not be necessary for a Presidency Magistrate to record the evidence. There is no distinction drawn between what the learned Judges refer to as 'morning cases' and any other cases. Nor is any distinction drawn between charges against people occupying a respectable status in life and people who occupy some other status. Nor in terms has any discretion been conferred upon the Magistrate. It is no doubt true that in one sense he has a discretion, because it is not illegal for him to record evidence if he likes to do so. But his right to refuse to record evidence is, in my opinion, absolute, and as long as the case falls within the cases excepted under S. 362, sub-s. (4), the Magistrate is not bound to record the evidence, and this Court has no jurisdiction to require him to do what the Statute says it is not necessary for him to do. If he likes to record the evidence, that is another matter: and probably if he was hearing a case which involved a question of serious consequence to the accused, and the accused asked him to make a record of those portions of the evidence on which he wished to rely on an application in revision, the Magistrate would, in a proper case, comply with that request. But in my opinion, the exercise of any such discretion would be ex gratia, and not subject to review in this Court."

4. Mode of recording evidence. — Under sub-section (2) it is required that the evidence shall ordinarily be recorded in the form of a narrative, but that the Magistrate may, in his discretion, take down any particular question or answer. But mere irregularities in the mode of recording evidence will not, unless failure of justice has been occasioned thereby, vitiate the trial. Thus, where a Presidency Magistrate recorded certain portions of the depositions of some of the witnesses which were of a more or less formal nature in the form of indirect narration as "P. W. 4 speaks to the identification by P. W. 1 of some of the jewels," and "P. W. 3 proves his signature to the search lists," it was held that the trial was not vitiated, as this mode of recording evidence occasioned no failure of justice.¹ But where in recording the examination-in-chief of two witnesses the Magistrate merely recorded the words "corroborates P. W. 1," it was held that what is required is not merely the opinion of the Magistrate regarding the evidence given by the witnesses but a correct record of the evidence given by them, that the Magistrate had failed to follow the directions given by this section so far as these witnesses were concerned and that the conviction could not be upheld.²

5. Memorandum of the substance of the examination of the accused. — Sub-section (2A) which was newly added in 1923 requires the Presidency Magistrates to record the substance of the examination of the accused in appealable cases. Simultaneous with the introduction of this sub-section, sub-s. (4) of S. 364 was amended so as to make the provisions of S. 364 as to the recording of the examination of the accused inapplicable to Presidency Magistrates in appealable cases.

Thus, in appealable cases Presidency Magistrates need only make a memorandum of the examination of the accused and are not required to take down the examination of the accused in the manner provided in S. 364. As to why this new sub-section was introduced, the Select Committee say :

"In order to meet difficulties that have arisen, we have introduced a sub-section (2A) laying down that Presidency Magistrates, in cases subject to appeal, shall make a memorandum of the substance of the examination of the accused,"

There is no provision as to the mode of recording the examination of the accused in non-appealable cases, which are now severely left alone confined to the protection that S. 370, by its own terms, would afford. Thus in non-appealable cases the only record of the examination of the accused is what is filled up under clause (f) of S. 370. As to the manner of filling up of this column, however, S. 370 is silent and it has been held that in a case where the accused, both at the time he took the plea and when he was examined, denied that he committed the offence, the entry "denies" is sufficient.¹

6. Framing of charges by Presidency Magistrates. — Sub-section (4) which has been newly added relieves Presidency Magistrates from the duty of framing charges in non-appealable cases. But in appealable cases where charges have to be framed under S. 254, the Presidency Magistrates are bound to frame charges.¹ Thus, to try an accused for an offence punishable under S. 420/75 of the Penal Code, without framing a charge, is a defect of procedure, for, S. 254 applies to Presidency Magistrates and it is mandatory.

7. Sentence of imprisonment — Meaning of. — See Notes under S. 411.

8. Sentences on conviction for several offences at the same trial. — Sub-section (3) provides for cases where at the same trial sentences for conviction for several offences are passed. The Select Committee observed : "It is provided that when sentences in excess of one are passed which are ordered to run concurrently, it is the heaviest sentence that determines the applicability of S. 362."¹ The one exception to the rule that sentences passed under S. 35 are to be considered as one is the case when the sentences passed are sentences of imprisonment ordered to run concurrently.

9. Right of parties to get copies of depositions. — Parties to criminal proceedings are entitled to get copies of depositions taken by Presidency Magistrates. Where on the dismissal of a complaint the complainant asked for copies of depositions, and they were refused, the High Court under S. 45, Specific Relief Act, had those records sent for and kept with the Registrar so that the party might take copies of them.¹

1. Remarks on demeanour of witness. — A mere record of the deposition of a witness in a language different from that in which it was deposed and in a narrative form is but a very imperfect representation of what passes between a witness and a counsel, more especially in cross-examination.¹ It cannot give the look or the manner of the witness, his hesitation, his doubts, his variation of language, his confidence, or precipitancy, his calmness or consideration. It has therefore been said that "it is, in short, or it may be the dead body of the evidence without its spirit which is supplied when given openly or orally to the ear and to the eye of those who receive it."² This "spirit" which is "supplied . . . to the ear and to the eye" consists in the manner in which the evidence is given or in the language of this section "demeanour. . . whilst under examination." This demeanour may be such as is not calculated to inspire confidence,³ or it may be such as to lead to the inevitable conclusion that the witness is perjuring himself.⁴ It is for this reason that when the credibility of a witness turns upon his manner and demeanour,⁵ or where the issue is simple and depends on the credit which attaches to one or other of conflicting witnesses,⁶ or where the evidence is all oral and its credibility is a matter of opinion,⁷ the opinion of the Magistrate who heard and saw the witnesses is not lightly set aside and it may even be said that it is generally taken as conclusive. Thus, where a Sessions Judge of experience stated that the demeanour of the eye-witnesses was evasive, that they inspired him with no confidence and no man could be convicted on their testimony, the appellate Court could not and would not accept the evidence of those eye-witnesses as true, unless the appellate Court is assured in the most positive and convincing manner that the criticism of the Sessions Judge was not justified.⁸ The High Court was prepared to accept the evidence of a girl of six years who was the only eye-witness to the murder as the Sessions Judge stated that "her evidence was given without hesitation and without the slightest suggestion of tutoring or anything of that sort."⁹ The demeanour of witnesses whilst under examination is thus very important on the question of credibility of oral evidence and hence the Magistrate or the Sessions Judge, as the case may be, is required by this section to record such remarks as he thinks material regarding the demeanour of the witnesses, so that the appellate Court might take these remarks into consideration in assessing the value to be attached to the oral evidence adduced in the case.

While the appellate Court should be guided by the remarks made by Magistrates about the demeanour of the witnesses, yet it is bound to, independently, consider the facts of the case.¹⁰ As a matter of fact, where the opinion of the lower Court is based not so much on the demeanour of the witness as on the inherent improbabilities of the story deposed to,¹¹ or the supposed discrepancies in the case as put forward by a party,¹² the appellate Court is in as good a position as the Magistrate, Sessions Judge or the trial Court to note the improbabilities or the discrepancies, and hence is not very much bound by the opinion of the trial Court.

Unsatisfactory demeanour, however, is not always a sure indication of falsehood. It has been said that it is dangerous to reject on the ground of unsatisfactory demeanour statements in themselves probable made under the sanction of an oath by witnesses of good reputation.¹³

13. ('09) 9 Cri L Jour 261 (264): 1 Sind L R 20, Crown v. Fazul Muhammad.

Nor is good or satisfactory demeanour always a real test of truth. A good demeanour on the part of an accomplice cannot be sufficient corroboration of his evidence. Impressions as to demeanour of an accomplice "are too ephemeral in their character to take the place of corroboration in material particulars to make the testimony of an accomplice worthy of credit."¹⁴

The attestation of a Magistrate that at the time the deposition of a certain witness was taken, he was in such a weak state of mind that the Magistrate was unable to proceed with his examination and that the witness could not answer more than two questions is prima facie proof of those facts and can be put before the jury.¹⁵

2. Remarks on substance of deposition of witness. — A Magistrate is not authorized under this section to record any remarks about the credibility or the substance of the deposition of the witness until the whole evidence has been taken.¹ The reason is that this will amount to prejudging the case and the parties are entitled to claim that he shall not do so until the case has been fully and finally presented to the Magistrate by the parties or their counsel after the entire evidence has been recorded.² Where a Magistrate, while recording the evidence of a witness, made a note not only as to his demeanour, but also that he had not spoken the truth, it was held that there was sufficient ground for transfer of the case to some other Magistrate.³

Record of examination should be full. — The whole examination of an accused person including every question put to him and every answer given by him must be recorded in full.¹ As far as possible the record should be made in the exact words used by him.² The section does not except even irrelevant questions from being taken down. The Magistrate or Court is responsible for putting such questions, but if they are put, they must be recorded as also the answers given.³ Even where the accused gives an answer, but says that it should not be taken down in his statement, the Magistrate should record it under this section.⁴

3. Language of the record. — The examination of an accused person should be taken down in the language in which the person is examined, the object being to represent the very words and expressions used so as to ensure accuracy and prevent misrepresentation or misconstruction of what was said.¹ If, however, such a record is not practicable, the law directs that the statement or confession shall be recorded in the language of the Court or in English.²

As to the effect of non-compliance with this rule with regard to the record of confessions, see Notes under S. 533.

4. "Shall be shown or read or interpreted to him." — It is obligatory on the Court to show or read the record of the statements of an accused person to him or to have it interpreted to him if it is in a language not understood by him, so that he might be assured that his words have been correctly taken down and, if necessary, have it corrected.¹

In the undermentioned case² the statement of the accused was not read over to him and his signature taken immediately after the close of the prosecution but when this was brought to the notice of the Magistrate the accused was given an opportunity of making a further statement although it was not asserted that the original statement was not correct. It was held that the trial could not be impeached as being illegal. See also Notes under S. 342.

Notes 5-8

5. "To explain or add to his answers."— When the record of an examination of an accused person is shown or read over to him, he is entitled to explain or add to his answers,¹ so that the whole shall be made conformable to what the accused declares to be the truth.² It is the statement as finally declared by him to be true that is to be accepted as representing his statement.³

6. The record shall be signed.— The record of the examination of an accused must be signed both by the accused and by the Magistrate or Judge making the record.

The signature of the accused person to a statement should be made in the immediate presence of the Magistrate himself. To take a signature in an adjoining room before a clerk, and not in the Magistrate's immediate presence, is not a proper compliance with the provisions of the section.¹

As to the effect of refusal by the accused to sign, see Note 10.

7. "Shall certify under his own hand."— The certificate need not be in the handwriting of the Magistrate or Judge. It is sufficient if it is under his hand only, i. e. signed by him.¹ When duly recorded, the certificate is sufficient prima facie proof of such examination and it is to be presumed that the proceedings were regular.²

8. Sub-section (3).— The examination need not be taken down in the Magistrate's own handwriting. It is enough if it is taken down in his presence and hearing.¹ In such cases, however, the Magistrate is bound to make a memorandum of the examination in his own hand and annex it to the record.

9. Sub-section (4). — Sub-section (4) provides that this section shall not apply to two classes of cases —

Section 364
Notes 9-10

- (1) Cases coming under S. 263, i. e. cases tried summarily.¹
- (2) Cases tried by a Presidency Magistrate.

Before the amendment of the Code in 1923, the procedure as to the recording of an examination of the accused applied to all Magistrates including Presidency Magistrates and it was held that it was obligatory upon the Presidency Magistrates to record the examination of the accused in the manner provided by the section, but that it was desirable that the Legislature should relieve the Presidency Magistrates altogether from this obligation.² The amending Acts of 1923 gave effect to this view and omitted the words "unless he is a Presidency Magistrate" in sub-s.(3) and added the words "or in the course of a trial held by a Presidency Magistrate" in sub-s.(4) and sub-s.(2A) to S. 362, in order "to make it clear that in cases where an appeal lies, the Presidency Magistrate shall take down a memorandum of the examination of the accused person as provided by the new sub-s.(2A) of S. 362 and that in non-appealable cases no record of the examination of the accused need be made."

Thus the effect of sub-section (4) as amended is that:

- (1) In the case of Presidency Magistrates, no record of the examination of the accused need be made in non-appealable cases and only a memorandum of the examination need be made in appealable cases.
- (2) In the case of Magistrates other than Presidency Magistrates, the examination must be recorded in full as provided by the section in all cases except those that come under S. 263 and in cases under S. 263, the examination must be recorded but need not be in full as provided in this section. In other words, some notes must be made of the examination of an accused person in a summary trial if he is examined.³

Record of evidence in High Court. The word "and" after the word "charter" was omitted by the Lower Burma Courts Act VI of 1900. The words "the Chief Court of the Punjab" and the words "the Chief Court of Lower Burma" were repealed by the Repealing and Amending Acts XVIII of 1919 and XI of 1923 respectively. The word "shall" was substituted for the word "may" and the words "and the evidence . . . such rule" at the end were substituted for the words "and the Judges of such Court shall take down the evidence or the substance thereof in accordance with the rule (if any) so prescribed" by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, XVIII of 1923.

The words "and the Chief Court of Oudh" were inserted by the Oudh Courts (Supplementary) Act XXXII of 1925.

The words "Courts of Oudh and Sind" were substituted for the words "Court of Oudh" by the Sind Courts (Supplementary) Act, XXXIV of 1926 which Act came into force on 15th April 1940 [see Sind Government Gazette Notification (Home Department, Political) No. 1499H/39 dated 28th March 1940.]

1. Scope and applicability of the section. — This and the following sections deal with judgments in trials. This section deals with the mode of delivering a judgment and the next section with the language and contents of such judgments.

The requirements of this section and the next are not mere matters of form; the provisions are based upon good and substantial grounds of public policy and must be obeyed.¹

Notes 1-7

The section does not apply to orders which are not judgments in trials. Thus, the section is not applicable to an order under S. 195 of the Code² or to an order dismissing a complaint under S. 203.³

2. "Judgment," meaning of. — See Notes to Sections 367 and 369.

3. Delivery of judgment cannot be delegated. — The judgment must be pronounced by the Judge or Magistrate who held the trial. The latter cannot delegate this function to others.¹ A Magistrate, who has gone on leave, or who has been transferred to another district and has handed over charge, has no jurisdiction to pronounce judgment in a trial held by him.² Where the Court consists of a Bench of Magistrates, a judgment prepared and delivered by the presiding officer in the absence of the other members of the Bench is not a proper judgment.³

4. Judgment must be pronounced. — The section specifically requires that every judgment ought to be pronounced by Court in accordance with the section.¹ Till then it is inoperative as a judgment and is nothing more than the private expression of an opinion by the Judge which can be changed and altered.² See also S. 350 Note 6.

5. Substance of judgment to be explained. — It is not obligatory on the Court to pronounce the whole of the judgment. It is enough if the substance of such judgment is explained. Where, however, the prosecution or the defence requests the Court to read the whole of the judgment the presiding officer should comply with the request.

6. Effect of loss of records. — Where a portion of the material records in a case is lost, it is open to the Judge to re-write the judgment from memory and from the materials before him and place it on the record.¹

7. "In open Court." — The judgment should be ordinarily pronounced in open Court. Where, however, a judgment is pronounced by a Magistrate in his private house instead of in the usual Court hall by reason of his illness, the judgment is not necessarily illegal and will not be set aside in the absence of proof of prejudice.¹

Section 366
Notes 7-11

8. Time of pronouncing judgment. — The judgment should be pronounced only after the closing of the case; if pronounced before, it is a nullity.¹ But there should be no unreasonable delay in pronouncing the judgment after the closing of the case. Such delay is not only unjust to the accused as it prevents them from appealing against the sentence, but is also opposed to the general principles of law.²

9. Pronouncing predecessor's judgment. — See Note 6 to Section 350.

10. Presence of accused when pronouncing judgment — Sub-section (2). — Where the accused was not required to attend to hear the judgment delivered and could not be so required as he had absconded before judgment, it was held by the High Court of Lahore that the judgment pronounced in his absence was wholly illegal and should be set aside.¹ See also the undermentioned case.² Where an accused person absconded before judgment and on his re-arrest, the Magistrate re-pronounced the judgment which he had pronounced in his absence, it was held that the defect was one which was cured under S. 537.³ It has been seen in Note 10 to S. 205, that where the accused is convicted and the sentence is not one of fine only, the Court must, under sub-s. (2) of this section, direct the personal attendance of the accused for hearing the judgment.

11. Sentence or release to be after judgment. — A sentence in the case of conviction, or a direction to set the accused at liberty in the case of an acquittal can only follow the judgment and not precede it. A breach of this rule is, however, only an irregularity which can be cured under the provisions of S. 537.¹ The High Court of Patna has,

1. Object and applicability of the section. — As has been already mentioned in Note 1 to S. 366, the provisions of this section also are based upon good and substantial grounds of public policy.¹

This section applies to such judgments as are referred to in S. 366, that is to say, to judgments in trials.² It does not apply to orders on petitions.³ It has been held by the Chief Court of Oudh that this section has no application to appeals.⁴ This view, it is submitted, is not correct as it goes against the express provisions of S. 424. See also section 424 and Notes thereon.

As to whether the section applies to orders under Ss. 118 and 123, see Note 17.

1a. Judgment — Meaning of. — The word “judgment” has not been defined in this Code. The wording of S. 366, as well as this section shows that the word “judgment” means a decision in a trial which decides a case finally so far as the Court trying the case is concerned, and terminating in either a conviction or acquittal of the accused.¹ Thus, an order of discharge is not a final order and is not, therefore, a judgment within the meaning of the section.² For further discussion, see Notes 2 and 3 to S. 369. See also the undermentioned cases.³

2. Language of judgment. — The judgment should be written in the language of the Court or in English.¹ Writing the judgment in any other language is, however, only an irregularity which can be cured by the provisions of section 537.²

3. “Written by the presiding officer.” — Prior to the amendment in 1923 this section provided that the judgment must be written by the presiding officer. It was, therefore, held that the judgment should be written by the Court itself and not by somebody else to the dictation of the officer.¹ The amendment of 1923 now allows such a procedure.

4. Contents of judgment—General.—This section requires that a judgment must contain the points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision.¹ The object of these provisions is that a Criminal Court should consider the case before it in all its bearings and should, on such consideration, arrive at definite conclusions after considering the evidence in the case.² Thus, a judgment which consists of a few notes on the arguments of the counsel and a somewhat vague conclusion is no judgment at all.³ But the section does not lay down any particular form which a judgment must take; and a failure to strictly conform to the provisions of this section would be a mere irregularity curable under S. 537 if it can be gathered from the body of the judgment itself that there has been substantial compliance with the provisions of the section.⁴

Where there are separate trials, separate judgments must be recorded. Where, however, two cases are closely connected together, the Court may write a detailed judgment containing a complete recital of the facts in the more important of the two cases and it would not be objectionable to refer to such recital in the separate judgment recorded in the less important case. At the same time the Court should always be careful to see that evidence which is only admissible in one of the two cases is not referred to or put forward as a reason for a conviction or acquittal in the other case in which it is not relevant.⁵

A judgment once delivered cannot be supplemented by means of an explanation furnished to the superior Court.⁶

When a case is forwarded to a superior Magistrate under S. 349, with the opinion of the forwarding Magistrate, the superior Magistrate must write an independent judgment and cannot merely adopt the opinion of the Magistrate by whom the case was forwarded.⁷

It is undesirable to make a document, prepared by a party, part of a judgment unless the Court has checked the document and found it to be correct.⁸

A judgment should specifically set forth facts and orders necessary to give authority to the Court in the particular case.⁹

A judgment should not be unnecessarily long.¹⁰ But it should be written in such a way that it would be easy to summarily dismiss an appeal against it on a perusal of the judgment alone.¹¹

In a trial with the aid of assessors, merely recording a finding on facts and evidence as explained to the assessors in summing up the evidence to them is not sufficient compliance with the section.¹²

5. Points for determination. — This section lays down that every judgment must contain the point or points for determination. To ascertain and define distinctly these points is the very ground stone of a sound and stable judgment.¹ A judgment which does not set forth the points for determination is defective.²

6. "Decision thereon"—Appreciation of evidence.—Though the rules of evidence are the same in civil and criminal proceedings, there is always a marked difference between the effect and appreciation of evidence in the two cases. In civil cases a mere preponderance of probability or greater probative value is sufficient to warrant a conclusion; while in criminal cases, before the accused can be convicted, there should be such a moral certainty of his guilt as convinces the mind of the tribunal as reasonable men, beyond the possibility of doubt or suspicion.¹ Thus, it is primarily the duty of the prosecution to establish the guilt of the accused to the satisfaction of the Court,^{1a} and it is certainly not the province or the duty of the accused to establish his own innocence.² The prosecution should establish the case against the accused by positive affirmative evidence of his guilt; and suspicion, however grave, does not take the place of proof.³ The

a hypothetical state of facts which were never put forward by the prosecution and were never suggested to the accused as being the case he had to meet.²¹ Mere suggestions by counsel in cross-examination, however ingenious, are of no evidentiary value unless accepted by the witness or proved by other evidence.²² The evidence relating to alibi should be scrutinised very carefully.²³

The standard of proof required in criminal cases does not vary with the magnitude or enormity of the crime,²⁴ though it is usual and prudent to observe the rule "the fouler the crime is, the clearer and plainer ought the proof of it to be."²⁵ In cases based on circumstantial evidence, such evidence should be so strong as to point very clearly to the guilt of the accused.²⁶ It is of utmost importance in such cases that in order to justify an inference of guilt, the inculpatory facts should be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of guilt.²⁷

Thus, where the action of the accused is open to two constructions, one criminal and the other honest, the Court should not assume that it was criminal : the presumption of innocence should prevail.²⁸

As to what constitutes proof of guilt of an accused person in any case depends upon the bundle of facts which serve to convince the Court of the prosecution story and of the charges against the accused. Absolute certainty amounting to a demonstration of guilt can seldom be had and it must only be judged whether, in the circumstances of each particular case, the degree of probability is so high as to justify one in regarding it as certainty and in acting accordingly.²⁹ A number of facts each having some probative value, but inconclusive by itself may be quite sufficient in their cumulative effect to justify a conviction,³⁰ but a collection of separate circumstances each by itself insufficient, being quite consistent with the innocence of the accused, cannot have such evidentiary value.³¹ Where, however, the evidence for the prosecution case is in the main trustworthy, it cannot be held that it is unsupportable merely because the prosecution failed to prove a motive for the crime,^{31a} or because there are discrepancies in detail,³²

of law is that it is better that a guilty man should escape punishment than that an innocent person should be made to suffer.³⁵ But the doubt, the benefit of which the accused is entitled to, should be such as any rational, thinking and sensible man may fairly and reasonably entertain : not the doubts of a vacillating mind that has not the moral courage to decide but shelters itself in a vain and idle scepticism.³⁶

Court has, therefore, no power to postpone the passing of the sentence to some future date once it convicts the accused.³

It is the duty of a Court, pronouncing a sentence, to define precisely the nature of the sentence intended to be passed; the sentence ought to be self-contained, so that the functionary who has to execute it should have nothing to do but to obey the directions given therein without making an inquiry on his own account.⁴ Thus, a direction in a sentence that the accused should be detained in a reformatory school for a period of five years unless he should sooner attain the age of eighteen years would not be a legal sentence, as it would leave to the officer-in-charge of the school to determine when the sentence would expire, otherwise than by reference to the warrant.⁵

11. "Shall be dated and signed by the presiding officer . . . at the time of pronouncing it." — The judgment must be dated and signed by the presiding officer,¹ at the time of pronouncing it in open Court.²

The word 'sign' has not been defined in this Code. It has been held to mean the "writing of the name of the person who is the signatory, so that it may convey a distinct idea to others that the writing indicates a particular individual whose signature it purports to be."³ Merely putting the initials of the presiding officer has been held not to amount to signing the judgment within the meaning of this section.⁴ The signature should be made with a pen and ink and not with a stamp.⁵

The omission to date and sign a judgment by the presiding officer is, however, only an irregularity covered by S. 537 and will not render the judgment void.⁶ Similarly the affixing of a signature with a stamp instead of with pen and ink is merely an irregularity.⁷

12. Judgment in the alternative — Sub-section (3). — Sub-section (3) of this section allows a judgment to be given in the alternative, when there is a doubt as to which of two sections or which of two parts of the same section applies.¹ Such a judgment in the alternative can be passed only in cases in which, not the facts, but the application of the law to the facts is doubtful.² See also Note 1 to S. 236.

Where a judgment does not state in express terms that the Court is in doubt under which of two sections or which of two parts of the same section the offence falls, as required by this section, it is only an irregularity which will not vitiate the judgment.³

13. Judgment in cases of acquittal. — Where the accused is acquitted, the judgment should state what the offences are of which he is acquitted and should direct that he be set at liberty.¹ When a verdict of not guilty is recorded, the Court should not, in its judgment, make any suggestion against the accused, except that of establishing his innocence.² See also Note 8.

As soon as a judgment of acquittal is pronounced, the accused is entitled to be discharged from custody and his further detention is illegal and no formal warrant of release addressed by the Court to the superintendent of the jail is necessary.³

sentence of death was not passed.¹ It, therefore contemplates sentences of death in capital cases as the ordinary rule and sentences of transportation for life as the exception. Before passing the lesser sentence, the Judge should find that there are really extenuating circumstances, not merely an absence of aggravating circumstances; it is not for the Judge to ask himself whether there are reasons for imposing the penalty of death, but whether there are reasons for abstaining from doing so.² But if the Judge is in doubt whether a sentence of death or a sentence other than death should be passed, the doubt, like all other doubts, should result in favour of the accused.³

This section, however, does not indicate what reasons should be considered sufficient for not passing a sentence of death in a capital case.⁴ Such reasons must be in accordance with established legal principles.⁵

As the law allows an appeal in cases of trial by jury on the ground of misdirection in the charge to the jury, the Judge should record the heads of the charge in such a form as to enable the Court of appeal to judge whether the facts and circumstances of the case were properly placed before the jury and the law correctly explained to them.¹ It is not sufficient for the Judge merely to state in his record that the law on the subject was explained and that the abstract of the evidence recorded in Court was given to the jury.²

Although there is nothing in this section as to when the heads of the charge should be written, it is desirable that the Judge should write them out as soon as possible after the delivery of the charge to the jury and while the facts are still fresh in his mind.³

In cases of trials by jury, the written heads of charge are the only record of the Judge's address to the jury and the Court of appeal must perforce base its decision in an appeal upon that record.⁴

See also the undermentioned cases.⁵

16. Judgment not in conformity with section — Procedure in appeal. — Where an appellate Court finds that the trial Court has not written a judgment in conformity with the provisions of this section, the proper procedure is to reverse the judgment of the lower Court and to order a de novo hearing and not to retain the case on its own file and ask the lower Court to record a proper judgment.¹ See also Notes to section 424.

17. Sub-section (6). — Even before the addition of sub-s. (6) to this section in 1923, it was held by the High Court of Madras that the words "offence (if any)" in sub-s. (2) of this section and the wording of sub-s. (2) of S. 117 suggested that the provisions of this section would apply to orders under S. 118 and sub-s. (3) of S. 123.¹ The High Court of Calcutta held in the undermentioned case² that, whether this section applies or not, the order should show that the case of each counter-petitioner had been considered on its own merits. The enactment of sub-s. (6) to the section in 1923 gives legislative recognition to the view of the Madras High Court mentioned above. This sub-section makes an order under S. 118 or S. 123, sub-s. (3), a judgment for the purposes of this section; and, therefore, by analogy an order passed under either of the two sections must be self-contained.

1. Legislative changes.—There was no provision corresponding to this section in the Code of 1861. Section 464 of the Code of 1872 provided that a judgment or final order cannot be altered or reviewed by the Court giving such judgment or order.

Changes made by Codes of 1882 and 1898 —

- (1) Section 369 of the Code of 1882 excluded High Courts from the purview of this section. (See Note 6.)
- (2) The words “except as provided in sections 395 and 484 or to correct a clerical error” were introduced.

Changes made in 1923 —

The words “save as otherwise provided such High Court, no Court” were substituted for the words “no Court other than a High Court” and the words “as provided in sections 395 and 484, or” were omitted by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, XVIII of 1923. (See Note 6.)

2. Scope of the section. — It is a universal principle of law that, when a matter has been finally disposed of by a Court, the Court is, in the absence of a direct statutory provision, functus officio and cannot entertain a fresh prayer for the same relief unless and until the previous order of final disposal has been set aside. (See Note 19 to S. 435.) This section is based on this principle. The judgment of a Criminal Court is final, as far as that Court is concerned; and, on signing and pronouncing it, such Court becomes functus officio and has, therefore, no power to review, override, alter or interfere with the judgment in any manner except —

- (1) where it is otherwise provided by the Code or by any other law for the time being in force (see Note 6); or
- (2) for the purpose of correcting clerical errors.¹

[But see ('70) 5 Mad H C R App xix (xx). (A Magistrate was held at liberty to alter his sentence at any time before the despatch of the Calender to the appellate authority.)]

The Court cannot also entertain any fresh application on the same facts for the same relief, as it would, in effect, amount to a re-consideration of the previous order.²

Section 369
Note 2

The prohibition will, however, extend only to matters which were the subject-matter of the prior adjudication. The section does not bar any application to consider a matter which was not the subject of the prior adjudication. Thus, where a prior appeal by an accused against his conviction was dismissed, it was held that a revision application by the Government for enhancement of the sentence is not barred inasmuch as the question of enhancement was not the subject-matter of adjudication in the prior appeal.³ As to whether the High Court can in such an application enquire into the merits or the legality of the conviction, see S. 439 Note 22.

The word "judgment" for the purposes of this chapter, and therefore for the purposes of this section also, means a decision in a trial which decides a case finally, so far as the Court trying the case is concerned and terminating in a conviction or acquittal.^{3a}

In respect of final orders, which do not amount to judgments in trials, the section does not in terms apply, but the general principle on which the section is based would apply and such orders cannot be reviewed or altered by the Court which passed them or by any Court of co-ordinate jurisdiction. Thus, an order under S.145,^{3b} or S.146,⁴ or S.488,⁵ or an order accepting the verdict of a jury and postponing the case for passing the sentence,⁶ or an order in a case to the effect "enter as false, mistake of law" passed on a perusal of a police-report,⁷ are all final orders disposing of the case, so far as the Court passing the order is concerned, and cannot be reviewed or re-considered by such Court. See also the undermentioned case.⁸ In Emperor v. Chinna Kaliappa Gounden,⁹ there are, however, certain observations made by White, C. J., tending to show that there is no such general principle as that mentioned above. It is submitted that they are not correct. The decision itself is supportable on the ground that the order in question in that case was not a final order.

Where the order in question is neither a "judgment" within the meaning of this section nor a final order, there is nothing in law preventing the Court which passed it from re-considering it or from entertaining a fresh application for the same relief as was asked for in the proceeding in which the order was passed. Thus, interlocutory orders such as an order for transfer of a case,¹⁰ or for issue of a judgment before signing it, and his attention is drawn to certain matters in it showing an error or mistake therein, he has ample powers to correct any mistake or alter the judgment before signing it.³ Under the rules of the Allahabad High Court, a judgment becomes final only after it is sealed, and, therefore, the High Court has power to alter or add to its judgment before it is actually sealed.⁴ See also the case cited below.⁵

A Division Bench of the Chief Court of Oudh has, however, held that the sealing of the judgment is not what creates finality in the judgment and that it is only a ministerial act,⁶ though it is the practice of the Court that judgments in criminal appeals and revisions are sealed. According to the practice of the Bombay High Court in its ordinary original criminal jurisdiction, no judgment nor any other pronouncement of its decision is signed until the warrant is signed by the presiding Judge and therefore before signing the warrant the Court can alter or review its sentence, though already pronounced.⁷

A "judgment" within the meaning of this section should be taken to mean and refer only to the judicial act of the Court in finally disposing of the case and must refer to, and indicate only the order of the Court when it is read out and signed by the Judge. It does not refer to any formal orders which are contemplated to be drawn up and issued⁸ in consequence by a ministerial officer of the Court. Such ministerial orders, which are issued, may be corrected or altered.⁹ See also section 350 Note 6.

4. "Alter or review the same." — It has been seen in Note 2, that the Court after signing and pronouncing its judgment becomes functus officio and has no power thereafter to add to or alter such judgment in any manner. Any such alteration or addition, if made, would be without jurisdiction, and a nullity.¹ Thus, the following alterations and additions are illegal:

- (1) The addition of an explanatory note to the judgment after it is pronounced.²
- (2) Subsequent sentence under S. 75, Penal Code (enhancing punishment on account of a previous conviction) after accused has already been convicted and sentenced.^{2a}
- (3) The enhancement of the sentence passed, even though it be at the request of the accused himself in order to make his case appealable.³
- (4) The addition of a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine even though it had been omitted to be passed by oversight.^{3a}

In the last mentioned case, the Court can only report the matter to the High Court under S. 433.⁴ Even in cases where the Court finds that the conviction and sentence passed by it are illegal,^{4a} or where the innocence of the accused is discovered from facts which come to light subsequent to the conviction and sentence passed by the Court,⁵ the only remedy would be to report the matter to the High Court under S. 433 or to refer the matter to the Provincial Government for necessary action under chapter XXIX and not to review or re-consider the matter itself. Similarly, where a mistake is pointed out to the Magistrate subsequent to his passing an order under S. 468, he cannot amend the order but can only submit the proceedings to the Sessions Judge for submission to the High Court for rectification.^{5a}

This rule against review of judgments applies only to cases where the portion of the judgment or order sought to be reviewed forms an integral part of the judgment, which cannot be treated as separate and distinct from such judgment.⁶ Where, however, the judgment contains damaging observations against a witness, who at the time had no opportunity of explaining or defending himself, it has been held that the Judge has power to re-consider that portion of it for the purpose of expunging such observations, if thereby the judgment against the accused is not affected, reviewed or varied.⁷ Similarly, where the Magistrate accidentally omits to pass an order regarding the disposal of property at the time of the judgment, he or his successor can subsequently pass an order for its disposal, as such an addition is not an alteration of the judgment.⁸ A judgment cannot be said to be altered within the meaning of this section in the following cases :

- (1) Where the Sessions Judge sentences the accused to transportation in ignorance of the fact that the accused is already serving a sentence of imprisonment and after becoming aware of it, directs that the sentence of transportation should take effect immediately.⁹
- (2) Where the Court adds a direction as to costs in a proceeding under section 145.¹⁰
- (3) Where the appellate Court setting aside a conviction on the ground of want of jurisdiction, but omitting to order a re-trial, adds the necessary directions subsequently.¹¹

5. Power of High Court to review its judgment. — Before the amendment of 1923, the section ran as follows :

“No Court, other than a High Court, when it has signed its judgment, shall alter or review the same except as provided in ss. 395 and 484 or to correct a clerical error.”

The question arose whether the express negation of the power of review in respect of criminal tribunals other than the High Court had the effect of conferring upon the High Court such a power by implication. It was held in a series of decisions that the exclusion of judgments of the High Court from the purview of the section could not, in the absence of any provision expressly conferring the power, be read as conferring upon the High Court any such power,¹ and that the Legislature in thus excluding High Courts from the purview of that section had in mind s. 434 and the Letters Patent which provide for review of judgments where questions of law are reserved for consideration.²

support of his case, has the High Court power to restore the case and hear the matter again on its merits? The answer to this question depends upon the nature of the order passed by the Court. The powers of revision vested in the High Court under S.439 can only be exercised at the discretion of the Court if the circumstances require it and ordinarily no party has a right to be heard in support of his case.⁸ But where such a right is expressly given to the accused as under sub-s.(2) to S.439, the High Court is bound to provide an opportunity to the accused before passing any order to his prejudice. It has, therefore, been held that where an order is passed to the prejudice of an accused, and by mistake or inadvertence, no opportunity had been given to him to be heard in his defence, such an order being without jurisdiction is not a judgment contemplated by this section and that the High Court has power to entertain a fresh revision application to re-consider the matter.⁹ Where, however, the sentence against an accused is reduced without notice to the Crown, the Court has no power to re-consider the matter as the Crown has no right to be heard in the matter of sentence.¹⁰ In all other cases, where a criminal revision application is dismissed for default of the petitioner, the High Court has no right to entertain a fresh application for the same relief.¹¹ It has, however, been held by the High Courts of Lahore,¹² Rangoon¹³ and Calcutta¹⁴ that even in such cases the High Court has power to set aside the order of dismissal, as an order of dismissal for default is not a judgment (which is presumably a judgment on merits) contemplated by this section. See also section 435 Note 20.

As to the inherent power of the High Court in such cases, see Note 6.

6. "Save as otherwise provided by the Code." — The provisions of the section should be read as subject to any provision of the Code which provides specifically for a review of judgment. The following provisions admit of review of judgments in particular cases:

- (1) Section 395 providing for review of the sentence of whipping.
- (2) Sections 432 and 434 providing for review of a case where questions of law are referred or reserved, as the case may be, for decision by the High Court.

- (5) Section 489 (2) providing for cancellation or variation of an order passed under S. 488.³
- (6) Judgments and orders passed by an appellate Court are final except in cases provided for in chapter XXXII. See S. 430. As to whether S. 430, which saves the right of revision in respect of appellate orders, has application to orders in appeal passed by the High Court itself, see section 439 Note 32.

Section 369
Note 6

The inherent powers of the High Court, as stated in S. 561A, do not include the power to review an order made by the High Court in its criminal jurisdiction. That section merely declares that such inherent powers as the Court may possess shall not be deemed to be limited or affected by anything contained in the Code; it does not confer on the Court any new powers such as any power to review or alter orders passed by itself.⁴

Synopsis

1. Scope of the section.
2. Record of particulars.
3. Plea and examination of the accused — Clause (f).
4. Recording reasons — Clause (i).
5. "Imprisonment."

Other Topics (miscellaneous)

"Imprisonment" — Refers only to substantive sentence. See Note 5.	Reasons—To be recorded briefly—Omission to do so not seriously prejudicing accused—Irregularity cured by S. 537. See Note 4.
Magistrate—Referring to document on record—No serious objection. See Note 4.	Section—No application to proceedings under Workman's Breach of Contract Act. See Note 1.
Omission to record particulars—Only irregularity. See Note 2.

1. Scope of the section. — This section is an exception to S. 367 and enacts that a Presidency Magistrate shall record the particulars specified instead of recording a judgment as provided by S. 367.¹ This section has no application to proceedings started under S. 2, sub-s.(1), and S. 3 of the Workman's Breach of Contract Act, 1859.²

2. Record of particulars. — The direction to record particulars should be strictly followed.¹ The various particulars should be recorded in the form prescribed by the various High Courts.² Where, however, all the important particulars have been recorded, the omission to record all the particulars in the form prescribed is only an irregularity which can be cured under S. 537.³

3. Plea and examination of the accused—Clause (f).—The words “if any” in clause (f) do not control the provisions of S. 342, under which the Magistrate is bound to record the examination of the accused.¹ No hard and fast rule is contemplated as to how the plea and examination of the accused are to be recorded; the entry, therefore, “denies” in the column was held sufficient compliance with the section where, when the plea was taken and the accused was examined, he merely denied having committed the offence.²

As to the effect of non-compliance with the clause, see S. 537 Note 12.

4. Recording reasons — Clause (i).—In all cases where the Magistrate passes a sentence of imprisonment or fine exceeding Rs. 200, he should record briefly his reasons for the conviction. It is enough if the reasons are briefly stated,¹ but it should be done in such a manner that the High Court may in revision be in a position to judge whether there were sufficient materials before the Magistrate to support the conviction.² Thus, a mere statement that the offence is proved,³ or that the accused has no defence to make,⁴ or that the Magistrate believes the prosecution witnesses,⁵ is not a compliance with the provisions of the section; where, however, the omission to record the reasons has not seriously prejudiced the accused,⁶ as where the trying Magistrate has made a record of the evidence and other important matters and the records are made available to the Court,⁷ the irregularity will be cured under S. 537. Section 441 further enables the Magistrate to submit a statement of reasons where the records are called for by the High Court (under S. 435) even in cases where no reasons are recorded at all by the Presidency Magistrate in his judgment. But where the conviction is passed without proper reasons therefor, on evidence of which no record is taken and which is, therefore, not available to the High Court, the omission to record the reasons in such cases is a grave irregularity which will be a sufficient ground for interference by the High Court.⁸ See also section 537 Note 12.

The Presidency Magistrate is not bound to give any statement of reasons in case he inflicts a fine of less than Rs. 200, but if he chooses to write a judgment in such a case it is his duty to give his findings on the facts proved.⁹

5. "Imprisonment." — The word "imprisonment" contemplated by this section refers to the substantive sentence passed; it does not include the sentence of imprisonment ordered in default of payment of fine.¹

Scope of the section.—The Court is bound, where the accused so requires, to furnish a translation of the judgment where it is recorded in a different language from that of the Court¹ but this section applies only to judgments and final orders in the nature of a judgment and has no application to orders on interlocutory applications or to administrative orders.² See also section 369 Note 2.

374.* When the Court of Session passes sentence of death, the proceedings shall be submitted to the High Court and the sentence shall not be executed unless it is confirmed by the High Court.

Sentence of death to be submitted by Court of Session.

1. Scope and object. — The Legislature has provided in the confirmation proceedings a final safeguard of the life and liberty of the subject in cases of capital sentences. The High Court has been given wide powers under this chapter in order to prevent any possible miscarriage of justice.¹ Similar reference is also provided under special laws in the case of sentences of death passed thereunder.²

References for confirmation can be made only in cases of sentences of death.³

The records transmitted to the High Court in a confirmation case must be complete.⁴

As to the time within which reference should be made, see the undermentioned case.⁵

Power to direct further inquiry to be made or additional evidence to be taken.

1. Further enquiry. — If on the reference under S. 374, the High Court thinks that a further enquiry is to be made, or additional evidence is to be taken regarding the guilt or innocence of the accused, it may make such further enquiry, or take such additional evidence itself, or direct the Court of Session to do so. Further enquiry would ordinarily be ordered, when there is any defect in the procedure adopted in the Court of Session. Thus, where the question was, if the accused was insane at the time he committed the murder of his wife, and where there was evidence that the accused spoke like an insane man on the day previous to the murder, and there was no evidence of any reasonable or probable cause for any jealousy on his part by reason of any evil conduct on the part of his wife, and the assessors found that the accused was not of sound mind, the High Court held that it was a "defect of enquiry" not to have placed the accused under medical observation. The High Court consequently directed the Court of Session to place the convicted person under medical observation for a month, and then forward the case to them, with the evidence of the medical officer and opinion of the Sessions Judge.¹ Where again the prisoner was convicted on the sole evidence of his confession, which he alleged had been tutored by the Magistrate who recorded it, the High Court directed the examination of that Magistrate on the question of the alleged tutoring.² The words "further inquiry should be made into or additional evidence taken upon" show that "further inquiry" does not always involve the taking of additional evidence. "Further inquiry" also includes the consideration of the evidence already taken.³

2. Additional evidence. — Additional evidence will be directed to be taken, or taken by the High Court itself when such evidence has been improperly rejected by the Court of Session as in the case of a confession wrongly rejected,¹ or when the evidence already on record is insufficient for arriving at a proper decision. Thus, when the evidence as to the prisoner's state of mind was insufficient, additional evidence was called for.²

Where during the course of the trial, the accused applied to be allowed to call for certain evidence material to his defence, and the Court of Session improperly refused to grant his application, the High Court permitted him under this section to produce such evidence.³

Under this section additional evidence can be taken on any point bearing on the guilt or innocence of the accused; while under S. 428 additional evidence can be taken whenever the appellate Court thinks it necessary. Thus, under S. 428 an appellate Court may test the value of a statement made by a defence witness by taking additional evidence in appeal;⁴ while under this section testimony of witnesses cannot be tested by admitting additional evidence. Thus, the High Court cannot refer to the earlier statements made by the witnesses to the police, with a view to discredit such witnesses.⁵

Where the circumstances called for the re-opening of the whole case owing to a grave irregularity in procedure, it was held that the proper course was to set aside the conviction and order a retrial instead of directing additional evidence to be taken under this section.⁶

3. Presence of the accused. — The presence of the accused could be dispensed with when the High Court is recording additional evidence.¹

4. Appeal. — Where on a reference, the High Court had pronounced its decision, it was held that the accused had no further right of appeal, though at the time of reference he could have preferred an appeal.¹

Section 376

1. Scope. — In dealing with an appeal the High Court cannot interfere with the verdict of the jury unless such verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge or to a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by the Judge. But in the case of a reference under S. 374, the powers of the High Court are not so limited and it is open to the High Court to go into the facts and to come to the conclusion that the finding of the jury is an unsafe finding, or is not justified by the evidence on record.¹ The High Court is thus empowered in such cases to substitute its own finding in the place of the verdict of the jury, even though the verdict is unanimous.² There seems to be no statutory limit to the power of the High Court in this behalf. The whole broad question of the guilt or innocence of the accused is before the High Court, and not merely the question of law as to evidence as in an appeal under S. 418, or questions of misdirection by the Judge or of misunderstanding on the part of the jury as under S. 423 (2).³ As a matter of fact, it has been held that in the case of a reference under S. 374 the question of misdirection is not of much importance as the High Court is obliged to come to its own independent conclusion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, independently of the verdict of the jury or even of the opinion of the Judge.⁴ Indeed the Legislature has provided in a reference under section 374, a final safeguard analogous to the functions of the Home Office in England, and has laid this duty on the High Court.⁵ Of course, the High Court has got this power only in cases where the sentence of death has been passed.⁶

But the High Court will act with great circumspection before it sets aside the verdict of the jury.⁷ It will generally interfere where the evidence which might have materially affected the finding, has been improperly rejected or admitted, or where the jury were improperly charged, or where they misunderstood the trial Judge's directions, or where the proved facts are wholly insufficient to support their verdict.⁸

2. May confirm the sentence. — Before the High Court confirms the sentence of death, it will see if the verdict of the jury is supported by the evidence on record¹ and is right on the facts before it.² As a matter of fact the death sentence will not be confirmed unless the High Court feels completely satisfied about the guilt of the accused even though the trial has been with the aid of a jury. In confirming the sentence, the High Court should scrutinise the evidence and see whether the verdict of the jury is perverse, whether the evidence has been improperly excluded or improperly admitted and whether the trial Judge has properly directed the jury on the points of decision, and has pointed out to them how far those points in his opinion are established or not, by admissible and relevant evidence and has otherwise directed the jury properly.³

Where the evidence is totally circumstantial, some Judges have been averse to confirming the sentence of death and have commuted it to one of transportation for life.⁴ There is, however, no rule of law that where the evidence is wholly circumstantial, death sentence should not be awarded.^{4a} In the undermentioned case,⁵ where the evidence was entirely circumstantial and the accused was a young man of nineteen years, the sentence of transportation for life awarded by the Sessions Judge was not enhanced to one of death.

There seems to be some difference of opinion on the question, if the age or sex of the accused can, of itself, be a sufficient reason for reducing the sentence. It may, however, be safely said that the age of the accused is a fact which might well be taken into consideration and has been, in fact, taken into consideration in determining the sentence to be passed in cases of murder.⁶

One view is that the age or sex of the accused is not of itself a sufficient reason for awarding the lesser sentence.^{6a} "If there are other

Note 2

* Delay in hearing the appeal for which the accused were in no way responsible has been considered a sufficient ground for not confirming the sentence of death. Carnduff, J., felt oppressed by the fact that the convicted persons had had the capital sentences suspended over their heads for nearly six months and he refused to confirm the sentences of death.⁹ Where, again, the High Court thinks it is "wrong and improper" that the sentence of death passed on the accused should be carried out, it will refuse to confirm the sentence.¹⁰

In determining whether the sentence is to be confirmed, the High Court may consider if the commitment and the conviction were by Courts of competent jurisdiction.¹¹

Satisfactory proof of motive is not always necessary before confirming the sentence.¹²

The fact that the accused murdered his sister to vindicate the honour of his family,¹³ or that murder was committed out of a feeling of revenge,¹⁴ are not enough grounds for refusing to confirm the sentence of death.

3. Commutation of sentence.—In a case of murder a sentence of death should ordinarily be imposed unless there are mitigating circumstances which would justify the Court in awarding the lesser sentence prescribed by law.¹ See s. 367, sub-s. (5). But the Court must not pass the more severe sentence when circumstances of extenuation exist, merely because the consequences of the crime have been more serious than in an ordinary case.²

The fact that for the murder of one person more than one have to be sentenced to death, or that the accused is the only son of his widowed mother, or is sincerely penitent and filled with remorse for his conduct,³ is no ground for commuting the sentence.⁴ Similarly, doubt as to the guilt of the accused is a ground not for awarding the lesser punishment but for acquitting the accused.⁵

It has been seen in Note 2 above that Carnduff, J., refused to confirm the sentence of death on account of the delay in confirming such sentence; the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court has expressed its agreement with the view expressed by that learned Judge.⁶ The Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court, while distinguishing the above case, however, says, "in the case of an ordinary murder, the delay in confirming a sentence of death may perhaps be taken into consideration."⁷ Where an accused was once sentenced to death, but the High Court quashed the conviction on the ground of want of territorial jurisdiction, and the accused was for a second time sentenced to death by a Court of competent jurisdiction, the High Court of Lahore commuted the sentence of death to one of transportation for life on the ground that the second trial was for an offence committed four and a half years ago.⁸

Where murder is committed under grave provocation but not under grave and sudden provocation, the accused will not be free from legal responsibility for murder; yet the High Court in such a case will commute the sentence of death to one of transportation for life.⁹ An accused killed his brother-in-law, a lad of eight years, under the belief that the deceased was helping in the infidelity of his wife. Yet the murder not having been committed under the "immediate influence" of provocation induced by that belief, the High Court of Calcutta¹⁰ confirmed the sentence of transportation for life but expressed the view that the Government might consider the question of reduction of sentence.

Where the accused at the time of the murder was "suffering from mental derangement of some sort," but was not by reason of such unsoundness of mind incapable of knowing the nature of his act or that he was doing what was either wrong or contrary to law, it was held that he was entitled to every indulgent consideration though guilty of murder.¹¹ Thus, where, because they cried and vexed him the accused killed his own children of whom he was very fond, at a time when he was suffering from fever and was consequently irritable and sensitive to sound, it was held that he was guilty of murder and that the sentence of transportation for life would satisfy the ends of justice.¹² Similarly, where the medical opinion was that the murder was perhaps committed in post febrile lunacy under the foolish belief that some one had done an injury to the accused, the sentence of death was commuted.¹³

Akin to these is the case where a person who is not suffering from any mental derangement brought about by provocation or disease, commits a murder in the honest and strong belief, though superstitious, "absurd and unfounded," that witchcraft was practised upon his wife or children as a result of which they took ill, and that it is only the murder of the supposed witch that will cure them. In such cases it cannot be said that the accused was by reason of unsoundness of mind incapable of knowing what he was doing was wrong, or contrary to law. They are cases of deliberate and intentional murder. But such belief is to be taken into account and some distinction should be made "between such cases as these and cases in which deliberate murder has been committed from baser motives." The distinction that is made is in the sentence passed and the death sentence will be commuted to one of transportation for life.¹⁴

Where the dead body has not been found, some Judges have awarded the lesser sentence. "As the body was not actually found, we think the Judge exercised a proper discretion in not passing the sentence of death," said their Lordships in Queen v. Budduruddeen.¹⁵ In the undermentioned case¹⁵ the Allahabad High Court altered a conviction under S. 302 into one under S. 307 of the Penal Code on the ground that the dead body not having been recovered, the fact of death was not proved beyond doubt. In a later case decided by the same High Court where the corpse was not found and the fact of death was proved by the retracted confession of the accused and by no other substantial evidence, Mukerji, J., was for commutation, while the other two learned Judges were for confirmation of the sentence of death.¹⁶

Where the evidence was enough to convict the accused of murder, yet there was doubt as to the precise part taken by the accused in the murder, it was thought "safer" to remit the capital sentence and pass

Where the condition of the convict was such that if he were hanged decapitation would ensue owing to an aperture in the neck communicating with the larynx, the High Court commuted the sentence of death into one of transportation for life.¹⁹ Lapse of time between commission of an offence and arrest of the accused does not entitle him to a lesser sentence, although it may be taken into account in fixing the appropriate sentence.²⁰ was no misdirection, if the evidence is not enough to sustain a conviction for murder.¹ Thus, where there were no eye-witnesses to the murder and there was a real doubt as to the identification of the accused and the retracted confession of the accused did not appear to be free and voluntary, the High Court annulled the conviction and acquitted the accused.² Where, again, the sole evidence on which the conviction was based was the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, the conviction was annulled.³ Similarly, where suspicion fell upon the accused on account of certain ill-feeling between them and the deceased, and the case depended solely on the evidence of the servant of the deceased, it being doubtful whether the servant could recognize the assailants, the High Court annulled the conviction and set the accused free.⁴

5. "Convict the accused of any offence." — Under S. 225 of the Code of 1872, the High Court was empowered to "annul the conviction and order a new trial." This was interpreted to mean that the High Court could only order a new trial after annulling the conviction, but could not "convict the accused for any other offence of which the Sessions Court might have convicted him."¹ But under the present section the High Court is empowered to annul the conviction and convict the accused of any other offence of which the Sessions Court might have convicted him and which the evidence on record would warrant. Thus, when the evidence on record showed that the accused took no actual part in the murder but that he helped in the disposal of the dead body and other articles, the High Court acquitted him of the charge of murder, but convicted him under S. 201 of the Penal Code.² Where the intention to kill was not clearly proved, the conviction for murder was annulled and altered into one for an offence under S. 226 of the Penal Code.³ See also the undermentioned cases.⁴

for giving judgment, a new trial may be ordered.¹ Where an accused was tried for murder without any pleader or advocate having been appointed to defend him and where the difficulties appearing in the evidence had not been cleared up in the course of cross-examination, either by the accused himself or by the Judge, and the High Court felt it difficult to confirm the sentence of death on the evidence before it, a re-trial was ordered.² Where the Judge practically withdrew the case from the jury by so summing it up as to make the jury register merely his own opinion, it was held that there was no proper trial and that there should be a new trial.³ See also the undermentioned cases.⁴

1. Scope. — Section 377 enacts that any order made on a reference under S. 374 shall be by a Bench consisting of at least two Judges. This section provides that, when the Judges constituting the Bench are equally divided in their opinion, the case with their opinions shall be laid before another Judge. The Judge to whom the case is referred on a difference of opinion is required to deliver his opinion “after such examination and hearing as he thinks fit,” and the order or judgment in the case shall follow such opinion. The difference of opinion may be either as regards the guilt or innocence of the accused or as to the appropriate sentence to be passed. In either of these cases, the section requires the reference to be made to another Judge¹ who is entitled to pass any order he thinks proper including an order directing re-trial of the accused.²

2. Difference of opinion as to the guilt of the accused. — Where a Bench was equally divided in its opinion as to the guilt of the accused, Mr. Justice Mahmood of the Allahabad High Court felt that the order should be one of acquittal “without the necessity of either a remand or a dissentient opinion being recorded.” While admitting that this section rendered it necessary for the case to be placed before another Judge in this circumstance, he observed :

“I cannot help feeling that, as a matter of judicial etiquette, when one Judge differs from his brother Judge on a pure question of the weight of evidence as to the propriety of a conviction, the opinion of the Judge who is in favour of acquittal should prevail—at least as a general rule. . . . I have always felt that the deliberate opinion of one Judge in favour of acquittal upon a grave question of the weight of evidence in a case heard by a Bench consisting of only two Judges should, ipso facto, constitute in most cases a sufficient reason for creating such a serious doubt that the benefit of that doubt should be given to the prisoner."¹

In the undermentioned case,² Edge, C. J., disagreeing with the above view observed that the view of Mahmood, J., involved the subordination of the opinion of the Judge who was for conviction, to that of the Judge who was for acquittal, apart from its being opposed to the statute, as admitted by that learned Judge himself. He further observed :

"I know of no rule of judicial etiquette which prescribes that a Judge, in a capital or any other case, should subordinate his judgment to that of his brother Judge."

The working of this section has often led to anomalous results. Where, on the evidence of a lad of 18 years, Subramaniya Iyer, Offg. C. J., was for confirming the conviction for murder, Boddam, J., was for acquitting the accused. Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., to whom the case was referred on account of this difference of opinion, agreed with Subramaniya Iyer, Offg. C. J., as regards the conviction, but differed from him as regards the sentence. The Officiating Chief Justice was for commuting the sentence of death to one of transportation for life on the ground that the accused committed the murder in consequence of the deceased attempting to blackmail him, but Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., passed the sentence of death, without even considering the extenuating circumstance referred to by Subramaniya Iyer, Offg. C. J.³ This, it is submitted, is a very hard case. If Boddam, J., had agreed entirely with Subramaniya Iyer, Offg. C. J., both as regards the conviction and the sentence, thus taking a more unfavourable view to the accused, the lesser sentence of transportation would undoubtedly have been passed. The fact that one of the learned Judges took a view entirely favourable to the accused resulted in a reference to the third who passed the sentence of death. While the sentence passed by Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., was perfectly legal under the Code, it is most respectfully submitted that it gives rise to the anomaly that a more unfavourable view to the accused on the part of Boddam, J., would have saved his life. Indeed, the accused in this case lost the benefit of the Officiating Chief Justice's judgment as regards the sentence, and the benefit of Boddam, J.'s judgment as regards the conviction. The course adopted by Carnduff, J., in similar circumstances, of passing the sentence of transportation for life, even when the Judge who confirmed the conviction was for passing the sentence of death, is, it is submitted, a very salutary one.⁴

3. Difference of opinion as to the sentence to be passed. —

It has been held that when the difference of opinion is as to the appropriate sentence to be passed, one Judge favouring the death penalty, and the other recommending that transportation for life would meet the ends of justice, the difference of opinion itself would be a sufficient ground for holding that the death sentence should not be passed.¹ It has, however, been said that it is not an inflexible rule and the third Judge to whom the case is referred is entitled to award the death sentence if he thinks it proper. The rule of "judicial etiquette and practice" strongly advocated by Mahmood, J., (see Note 2) can be more easily followed in this case, than in a case where the difference is as to the guilt of the accused.

passed under S. 34, by the Assistant Judges and Magistrates, has now been omitted ; such sentences now come before the High Court on appeal, under S. 408 clause (b). The present S. 380 is entirely a new one.

2. Power of the first class Magistrate or Sub-divisional Magistrate to remand. — The first class Magistrate or Sub-divisional Magistrate is not empowered to remand the case to the second class or third class Magistrate who submitted the case to him under S. 562. Thus, where a second class Magistrate finding the accused guilty of voluntarily causing grievous hurt under S. 325, Penal Code, sent the case to the District Magistrate under the proviso to S. 562, it was held that the order of the District Magistrate sending the case back to the second class Magistrate on the ground that S. 562 did not apply to the case was illegal. This section enacts that the District Magistrate should pass such order as he would have passed if he had originally heard the case, and a District Magistrate could not have sent the case to a second class Magistrate if he had originally heard it himself.¹

3. Power of the first class Magistrate or Sub-divisional Magistrate to acquit. — There is a difference of opinion on the question if the first class or Sub-divisional Magistrate to whom a case is sent under the proviso to S. 562 is empowered to acquit the accused.

It may be noted that in the analogous S. 349, where the trying Magistrate who is not empowered to pass a sufficiently severe sentence is required to submit the proceedings and forward the accused to the superior Magistrate, the trying Magistrate is to “record the opinion” that the accused deserves a more severe sentence than he can pass. But in S. 562 the accused is “convicted” before he is forwarded to the superior Magistrate. Under S. 349, the Magistrate is empowered to pass “such judgment, sentence or order as he thinks fit and as is according to law.” Under this section such Magistrate “may pass such sentence or make such order as he might have passed or made if the case had originally been heard by him.” In the undermentioned case¹ their Lordships of the Madras High Court observed as follows :

“When a Magistrate of the second or third class submits proceedings under S. 349, he does not convict but merely expresses the opinion that an accused person is guilty. But when a case is submitted under S. 562 a conviction has first of all to be recorded and so when the proceedings reach the Magistrate for disposal under S. 380, that Magistrate has to deal with a person who has been convicted and it is not a case of the referring Magistrate having merely recorded the opinion that he ought to be convicted. Such opinion as the referring Magistrate expresses being that on the conviction, action should be taken under S. 562. It is our opinion that when an accused person comes before a Magistrate under S. 380, he can be treated only as a convicted person and that it is not permissible for the Magistrate acting under that section to set aside the conviction and to acquit him.”

It has, however, been held in Upper Burma Judicial Commissioner's Court² that the power given to the Magistrate to pass such sentence as he would have passed if he had heard the case originally himself, enables him to acquit the accused. The same view is expressed, though as obiter, in an earlier case of the Lower Burma Chief Court,³ and the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court⁴ has adopted the view of the Burma Courts. Support is sought for this latter view in the power given to the Magistrate to take additional evidence or make further enquiry. On this point the Madras High Court in the said case¹ observed as follows :

"It may be for the purpose of satisfying the Magistrate that it really is a case for applying S. 562, and possibly such evidence (additional evidence) might be taken with a view to seeing whether the conviction was correct. Even so, in our view, S. 380 does not allow of a Magistrate who acts under it to set aside a conviction."

3a. Power of the first class Magistrate or Sub-divisional Magistrate to refer under section 435. — Under this section, a Sub-divisional Magistrate to whom proceedings are submitted can only dispose of the case in the manner provided by the section. He is not competent to make a reference to the District Magistrate under S. 435.¹

When an offender is sentenced to transportation he should, under this section, be forwarded with a warrant to the jail in which he is or is to be confined and, by virtue of S. 58 of the Penal Code, he will be deemed to be undergoing the sentence of transportation during the period of his imprisonment prior to actual transportation.

Under S. 368, sub-s. (2) of the Code, a sentence of transportation should not specify the place to which the person sentenced is to be transported.

2. "Shall forthwith forward a warrant to the jail." — Under S. 541, sub-s. (1), the Provincial Government has to appoint the place wherein any person liable to be imprisoned or committed to custody under the Code is to be confined, and, under this section, the Court passing the sentence should forthwith forward a warrant to the jail in which the accused is or is to be confined.¹ The words "jail" and "prison" do not include a police lock-up, and the Magistrate has no power to sentence an offender to suffer imprisonment in a police lock-up.²

2a. Accused on bail — Procedure. — Where the accused is on bail and is not present when the Court upholds a sentence of imprisonment, the procedure is for the Court to issue a warrant for his arrest to a police-officer under S. 77.¹ There is no procedure laid down by the Code that the Court should ask the sureties to ask the accused to surrender.²

3. When a sentence of transportation or imprisonment commences. — There are three cases under the Code in which a sentence of imprisonment or transportation may commence on a future date :

- (1) Where a person is convicted of two offences at one trial and the Court sentences him to suffer imprisonment or transportation for each of the offences, the sentences to run consecutively (S. 35).
- (2) Where a sentence of imprisonment or transportation is passed on an escaped convict and the new sentence is not severer in its kind than the sentence the convict was undergoing when he escaped (section 396).
- (3) Where a sentence is passed on a person already undergoing a sentence of imprisonment or transportation (S. 397).

Note 3

In all other cases, a sentence of transportation or imprisonment will commence from the time it is passed;¹ and the Court has no power to direct that such sentence should commence on a future date.² Nor has the Court power to make a sentence precede a conviction.³ The reason is that a sentence should follow and not precede a conviction.^{3a} Thus, it is illegal to sentence an offender for the period already undergone by him in the police custody.⁴

A sentence of transportation or imprisonment should be definite in respect of each offence.⁵

- (a) issue a warrant for the levy of the amount by attachment and sale of any movable property belonging to the offender;
- (b) issue a warrant to the Collector of the District authorizing him to realize the amount by execution according to civil process against the movable or immovable property, or both, of the defaulter :

Provided that, if the sentence directs that in default of payment of the fine the offender shall be imprisoned, and if such offender has undergone the whole of such imprisonment in default, no Court shall issue such warrant unless for special reasons to be recorded in writing it considers it necessary to do so.

(2) The Provincial Government^a may make rules regulating the manner in which warrants under sub-section (1), clause (a), are to be executed, and for the summary determination of any claims made by any person other than the offender in respect of any property attached in execution of such warrant.

(3) Where the Courts issue a warrant to the Collector under sub-section (1), clause (b), such warrant shall be deemed to be a decree, and the Collector to be the decree-holder, within the meaning of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, and the nearest Civil Court by which any decree for a like amount could be executed shall, for the purposes of the said Code, be deemed to be the Court which passed the decree, and all the provisions of that Code as to execution of decrees shall apply accordingly :

^a Code of 1898, original S. 386.

386. Whenever an offender is sentenced to pay a fine, the Court passing the sentence may, in its discretion, issue a warrant for the levy of the amount by distress and sale of any moveable property belonging to the offender, although the sentence directs that, in default of payment of the fine, the offender shall be imprisoned.

1. Amendments in 1923. — This section has been substituted for the old S. 386 by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, XVIII of 1923. The material changes introduced are as follows :

- (1) The word 'attachment' has been used in place of the word 'distress.'
- (2) A warrant for the levy of the fine may now be issued for execution according to civil process against the moveable as well as the immovable property of the defaulter.
- (3) Where the offender has undergone the whole of the imprisonment awarded in default of payment of fine, no warrant against his properties should issue unless for special reasons recorded in writing.

2. Recovery of fine. — Section 64 of the Penal Code provides that whenever an offender is sentenced to pay a fine, with or without imprisonment, it is competent to the Court to direct that, in default of payment of such fine, the offender shall suffer imprisonment for a certain period. The undergoing of such imprisonment does not, however, operate as a discharge or satisfaction of the order for payment of the fine, which may, nevertheless, be levied in the manner prescribed by this section,¹ i. e. —

- (1) by attachment and sale under the provisions of this Code of the moveable property of the offender, or
- (2) by execution by civil process against his moveable or immovable property or both, or
- (3) by both the above methods.

There are, however, two limitations subject to which the above procedure is to be adopted, viz. —

- (1) Where the offender has undergone the whole term of imprisonment in default, no warrant should be issued for levy of the fine except for special reasons to be recorded.
- (2) No fine can be levied after the period of six years after the passing of sentence, or, where, under the sentence, the offender is liable to imprisonment for a longer period than six years, then after the expiration of the period.² The mere fact, however, that the Court has written off a fine as irrecoverable is no bar to its taking action under this section within the said period if it subsequently appears that the offender has acquired the means of paying it.^{2a}

Where an offender is sentenced to pay fine only and to imprisonment in default of payment thereof, the imprisonment may be suspended to enable the offender to pay the fine in instalments or on a future date.³

The provisions of this section have been declared to apply —

- (1) to the levy of all fines imposed under the authority of any Act, Regulation, Rule, or bye-law, in the absence therein of any specific provision to the contrary,⁴
- (2) to the recovery of the amount of maintenance ordered to be paid under S. 488,⁵

- (3) to the recovery of all moneys ordered under this Code to be paid but for which no method is otherwise expressly provided for.⁶ Thus, the recovery of compensation amount ordered to be paid under S. 250, or of costs ordered to be paid under S. 148, or of the court-fees or process-fees ordered to be paid under S. 546A, may all be recovered in the manner provided by this section,
- (4) to the recovery by the Local Board under S. 221 of the Madras Local Boards Act, XIV of 1920, of any fee, toll, compensation or damages due to it.⁷

Where money found on an accused person at the time of his arrest is taken and placed in the custody of the Court, it has been held that the Court at the time of convicting and sentencing him can impose a fine and order that the fine should be recovered by confiscation of the money under S. 517.⁸

3. "Has been sentenced to pay a fine." — Before a warrant can be issued under this section it is necessary that the Court issuing the warrant should have sentenced the offender to pay a fine. So, a Court cannot, for instance, issue a warrant, merely on a report of a Railway Traffic Inspector to the effect that damage has been done to the railway carriage and that it should be recovered.¹

A sentence of fine should be specific as to each offender fined.² It is not proper to sentence two or more offenders to pay a fine jointly.³

See also ss. 63 to 70 of the Penal Code.

4. Offender undergoing whole term of imprisonment in default — Levy of fine. — Under the section, as it stood before the amendment of 1923, the Court could issue a warrant for the levy of fine even though the offender had undergone the whole term of the imprisonment in default of fine. Under the present section as now amended, a warrant should not issue for the levy of fine in such cases unless for special reasons to be recorded the Court considers it necessary to issue such a warrant. But where the offender has been committed to jail for failure to pay the fine but the full term of imprisonment for default has not been completed, the proviso does not apply and a warrant can be issued.¹ Moreover, the proviso only forbids the issue of a warrant after the imprisonment in default of fine has been served; it does not require that where a warrant has been issued it must be withdrawn if the imprisonment in default of fine has been served for the full period.² But in dealing with such warrants the Court should follow the policy underlying the proviso; so that, if there are special reasons for not withdrawing the warrant the Court should refuse to withdraw it.³ The special reasons for issuing the warrant or for not withdrawing it should be reasons accounting for the fact that the fine has not been recovered before the sentence in default has been served and any reasons which are directed to that point would be relevant.⁴ The facts that the offence is a serious one and that the complainant has been allotted part of the fine are irrelevant.⁵ But it has been said that where an offender having the means of paying the fine chooses to undergo imprisonment rather than pay the fine, it is a sufficient special reason which will enable the Court in its discretion to order that the fine may be levied, notwithstanding that the offender has served the full term of imprisonment ordered for default of payment of the fine.⁶

Where an offender sentenced to fine and to imprisonment in default, paid a portion of the fine, but, the fact not having been communicated to the jailor, he had to serve the whole term, it was held that the Court had no jurisdiction to refund the fine, but that the party should apply to the Local Government for a refund.⁷

5. "Court passing the sentence." — The power to levy a fine is restricted to the Court passing the sentence.¹ It may be exercised either by the Judge or Magistrate who passed the sentence or by his successor in office.² See the undermentioned case.³ See also S. 389.

6. "May take action." — Where an offender has been sentenced to fine and to imprisonment in default of payment of the fine, it is not imperative that the Court should take action in all cases. The words "may take action" show that it is in the discretion of the Court to do so or not. But where an order for payment of money has been made under the Code, S. 547 provides that the amount shall be recoverable as if it were fine, and it has been held that the Court has no discretion in such cases to refuse to take action under this section for the recovery of the amount.¹

7. Execution against immovable property. — Prior to the substitution of this section for the old one in 1923, there was no provision for attachment and sale of immovable property of the offender for the purpose of realising a fine and it was held that a sale of immovable property for recovering a fine conferred no title on the purchaser as the sale itself was without jurisdiction.¹ Clause (b) now enables the Court to proceed against the immovable properties belonging to the offender. This, however, can only be according to civil process and not as provided in this Code. The Court also has power to issue a warrant for attachment and sale of moveable property and simultaneously to order execution against immovable property according to civil process.

8. Priority over other debts. — A fine imposed or an order for payment of money passed by a criminal Court is a debt due to the Crown — and as a Crown debt it takes precedence over ordinary contract debts.¹ The character of Crown debt is not lost even though there is a direction that it should be paid over to the complainant.²

9. Death of offender. — Section 70 of the Penal Code provides that the death of the offender shall not discharge from the liability for fine, any property which would, after his death, be legally liable for his debts; and therefore a warrant for the levy of the fine may be issued under this section, even after the death of the offender, against properties in the hands of his legal representatives.¹

10. Attachment of moveable property — Clause (a). — Prior to the substitution of this section for the old one in 1923, the section used the word "distress" and Form No. 37 of Schedule v contained the words "make distress by seizure." As the words "moveable property" were used in the section as being the subject of 'distress' that is, actual seizure, it was held that only tangible or corporeal moveable property capable of being seized could be proceeded against by way of distress and not such property as debts or choses in action¹ which could not be 'seized.' It was also held that a share or interest in joint moveable property could not be seized and therefore could not be distrained under the section² though a share or interest in joint property could be attached under S.88 by the issue of a prohibitory order or the appointment of a receiver.^{2a} The substitution in the present section of the word "attachment" for the word "distress" shows that even a debt due to or a share in joint moveable property belonging to an offender could be attached.³ Sub-section (2) provides that the Provincial Government may make rules for regulating the manner in which the attachment is to be made. In the absence, however, of any such rules the question arises as to the mode in which an attachment of a debt or share in joint moveable property is to be effected. It has been held that seizure and sale of the property in which the offender has an undivided fractional interest are not legal.⁴ According to the High Court of

Section 386

Madras⁵ the proper course in such cases is to follow the principle adopted in the Civil Procedure Code and to proceed under O. 21, Rr. 46 and 47.

The High Court of Patna⁶ and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind⁷ have expressed the view that the better method to adopt in such cases would be to proceed under clause (b) rather than clause (a) of the section.

Under sub-s. (1) clause (a) of this section, any moveable property belonging to the offender can be attached. The provisions of the Civil Procedure Code exempting certain property from attachment and sale do not apply to criminal Courts.⁸

Salary not yet drawn by the offender is not moveable property within the meaning of this section.⁹

11. "Belonging to the offender." — The Court has power under sub-s. (1) (a) to attach only moveable property belonging to the offender, and therefore cannot order the attachment of the money deposited by a surety for the appearance of the offender, in execution of a sentence of fine passed against the offender.¹ Similarly, where joint moveable property passes by survivorship to the other members of the family on the death of the person, such property cannot be attached as it is no longer property of the person in the hands of the other members.² It has been held that a sentence of fine against a coparcener cannot be executed by attachment and sale of joint moveable property of the family as the property cannot be said to belong to the coparcener who has got only an unascertained interest therein.³

It is the duty of an officer entrusted with the execution of a warrant of attachment to ascertain by all possible means whether the property belongs to the offender.⁴

12. Claims to property attached under sub-section (1) (a).

— Under the section before the amendment of 1923, there was no provision for the determination of claims which might be preferred to the property attached,¹ but the Court had, however, to satisfy itself that the property attached belonged to the offender.² In cases of doubt it was held that the proper procedure was to stay the sale to enable the claimant to establish his title to the property in a civil Court.³

Sub-section (2) of the present section now provides that the Provincial Government may make rules for the summary determination of any claims that may be made in respect of the property attached under sub-s.(1) (a) and it is the duty of the Court in such cases to hold a proper inquiry into the title of the claimant.⁴ In the absence of such rules, it has been held that the procedure prescribed for the inquiry into claims under s. 88 of this Code should be adopted.⁵

The summary procedure for the determination of claims under sub-s.(2) applies only during the subsistence of the attachment. Where, therefore, money is attached and credited to the Government, an application for the refund of the money by the Government does not lie, the reason being that the attachment must be deemed to be put an end to as soon as the money is credited to the Government.⁶

immovable property of the offender or against such moveable property as cannot be attached by seizure under sub-s.(1)(a), the better procedure is to issue a warrant as provided under sub-s.(1)(b) for execution according to civil process. Sub-section (3) provides that such a warrant shall be deemed to be a decree and the Collector to be the decree-holder and the nearest civil Court can execute the decree in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to the execution of decrees (see O. XXI of the Civil Procedure Code). A warrant issued by a Magistrate to a Collector must, therefore, be accepted as a decree by the civil Court to which it is sent for execution.¹ The Bombay High Court has held that a warrant under this section is deemed to be a decree of the civil Court only for the purposes of execution and therefore the exemption of agriculturists' lands from execution of decrees under S. 22 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act does not extend to such warrants.² The Lahore High Court has, however, held that by virtue of sub-s.(3) the warrant becomes a decree of the civil Court, and therefore the land of an agriculturist cannot be attached and sold in execution of such "decree" by virtue of S. 16 of the Punjab Land Alienation Act.³

It is not permissible for the executing Court to go behind the warrant sent for execution or to question the validity of the warrant in respect of some antecedent defect in proceedings before the criminal Court.⁴

14. Revision. — An order of the Magistrate passed under this section in his judicial capacity is subject to revision under S. 435.¹ But an order of the Magistrate directing recovery of an amount ordered to be paid (see S. 547), such as an amount due to the Port Trust, though passed under this section, is only an executive order and is, therefore, not open to revision.²

1. Legislative changes.

- (1) This section was substituted for the original S. 388 by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Second Amendment) Act, XXXVII of 1923. Under the section as it stood previously, the Court could not suspend a sentence of fine unless a warrant for the recovery thereof had been issued under S. 386.¹ This is not necessary now.
- (2) Under the old section a suspension of the sentence could not exceed a period of fifteen days from the date of executing a bond under the section. Under the present section there can now be an order for payment in two or three monthly instalments and suspension of the sentence during that period.

2. Scope of the section. — In order that the section may apply, two conditions are necessary, namely that the offender must have been sentenced,

(1) to fine only, and

(2) to imprisonment in default of payment of such fine.

The section has, therefore, no application to cases where an offender has been sentenced to fine in addition to a sentence of imprisonment¹ or where he is not sentenced to imprisonment in default of the payment of the fine.²

Section 388
Notes 2-3

3. Order for payment of money on non-recovery of which imprisonment may be awarded — Sub-section (2). — Under S. 61 of the Penal Code, whenever a sentence of fine is passed the Court can order that in default of payment of such fine, the defaulter shall suffer imprisonment for a certain period. There is no such general provision as to orders for payment of money other than fine. Sub-section (2) of this section refers to an order made by a criminal Court for the payment of money but which is not a punishment inflicted on an offender for a criminal offence.¹ The Court has no power to order imprisonment in default of payment of any such amount unless it is specifically provided for by a statute.² The Code contains the following provisions for payment of money on the non-recovery of which imprisonment may be awarded :

- (i) Payment of compensation under S. 250, sub-s. (2A).
- (ii) Payment of maintenance under S. 488, sub-s. (3).
- (iii) Payment of the penalty due on a bond under S. 514, sub-s. (4).
- (iv) Payment of process-fees, etc., under S. 516A, sub-s. (1).

In such cases if the money is not paid forthwith the Court may require the person to enter into a bond as provided by sub-s. (1) and on his failure to do so, may at once pass a sentence of imprisonment.

See S. 250, S. 514 sub-s. (4), S. 488 and S. 516A.

It is not necessary that a warrant for the levy of such amount should be issued, and the undermentioned cases³ decided before the amendment to sub-s. (1) are no longer of any practical importance.

Section 389

389.* Every warrant for the execution of any sentence may be issued either by the Judge or Magistrate who passed the sentence, or by his successor in office.

1. Successor in office. — A sentence was passed by a special Magistrate appointed under Ordinance 11 of 1931. The special criminal Court came to an end in 1932 with the expiry of the Ordinance. It was held that the sub-divisional Magistrate who succeeded the special Magistrate was not a successor in office of the special Magistrate and that he had no power to issue the warrant.¹

1. Legislative changes. — The words "subject to the provisions of s. 391" were added by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923. See Note 3.

2. When the accused is sentenced to whipping only. — This section applies when the accused is sentenced to whipping only. Sentences of whipping are passed under the provisions of the Whipping Act (IV of 1909). Sections 3 and 5 of that Act deal with offences for which whipping can be given in lieu of other punishments prescribed under the Penal Code, while s. 4 deals with offences for which whipping can be given in addition to the other punishments prescribed therefor.

Section 3 of the Whipping Act, IV of 1909, enacts that (a) in the cases of theft under s. 378, Penal Code, and aggravated forms of it under ss. 380 and 382, and (b) in the cases of lurking house-trespass or house-breaking under ss. 443 and 445, Penal Code, and aggravated forms of them under Ss. 444 and 446, Penal Code, respectively, whipping may be awarded in lieu of the other punishments.

Section 390
Notes 2-4

Section 5 of the said Whipping Act provides that the punishment of whipping may be inflicted upon juvenile offenders in lieu of other punishments, in the following cases :

- (i) All offences punishable under the Penal Code, except those specified in chapter VI and in Ss. 153A and 505 and offences punishable with death.
- (ii) Offences punishable under any other law with imprisonment, which the Provincial Government may specify in this behalf.

Thus, this section applies only in those cases where sentences of whipping are passed under Ss. 3 and 5 of the Whipping Act.

Where a youthful offender for one offence is ordered to be detained in a Training School or a Borstal Institution and for another offence tried at the same trial is sentenced to whipping, the Magistrate must act under the provisions of this section.¹ The reason is that a person sentenced to detention in a Borstal Institution is not sentenced to imprisonment.

3. "At such place and time as the Court may direct." — According to the High Court of Bombay the sentence of whipping need not necessarily be executed on the same day as the sentence was passed, but the Court can fix a day in the future for that purpose.¹

Before the amendment of S. 391, in 1923, it was held by the High Court of Madras that a Magistrate had no power to suspend or postpone the execution of a sentence of whipping only, even in cases where such sentence was appealable (as where a second class Magistrate passed a sentence of whipping only).² This practically rendered the right of appeal nugatory. The Chief Court of Lower Burma, on the other hand, held that whenever a sentence of whipping was passed by a Magistrate, against whose sentence an appeal lay, the Magistrate was bound to ask the prisoner whether he intended to appeal and if the prisoner said that he intended to do so, to suspend the execution of the sentence on the analogy of S. 391.³ The addition of clause (a) to sub-s. (1) of S. 391 now makes it clear that if the accused furnishes bail for his appearance, the sentence may be suspended for fifteen days or, if an appeal is made within that time, until after the sentence is confirmed.

4. Postponement of whipping sentence when accused is under sentence of imprisonment in another trial.—The direction in this section, that the sentence shall be executed at such place and time as the Court may direct, is intended for the case where the accused is not already under another sentence and is not also at the same time sentenced to imprisonment. It, therefore, does not apply where he is already under another sentence of imprisonment. In such a case the Court should, when passing the order required by this section, follow the analogy of S. 391 (1) as far as may be. It cannot, therefore, postpone a sentence of whipping only till after the accused has undergone a sentence of imprisonment in another case.¹

(2) The whipping shall be inflicted in the presence of the officer in charge of the jail, unless the Judge or Magistrate orders it to be inflicted in his own presence.

(3) No accused person shall be sentenced to whipping in addition to imprisonment when the term of imprisonment to which he is sentenced is less than three months.

Under the provisions of the Act IV of 1909, whipping should be inflicted in cases where there is a certain amount of aggravation in the commission of the offence. Where an accused was convicted under s. 392, Penal Code, for an offence of robbery and sentenced to fine and whipping and in default of fine to imprisonment, the High Court set aside the sentence of whipping on the ground that the hurt caused in the course of the robbery was very slight.^{1a} Where a sentence of whipping only was legal, but the combined sentence of whipping and imprisonment was passed and the former sentence was executed, the sentence of imprisonment was set aside in revision.²

5. Postponement of the execution of sentence of whipping in addition to imprisonment. — Whipping shall not be inflicted within fifteen days from the date of the sentence or until such time as the sentence is confirmed in appeal, if an appeal is preferred within that time. There is no power vesting in Magistrates or Sessions Judges to postpone the execution of the sentence beyond the time. It has been held that it is imperative that a sentence of whipping in addition to imprisonment should be carried out immediately on the expiry of the fifteen days from the date on which it was passed unless an appeal be made within that time.¹ It cannot be postponed till after the term of imprisonment in addition to which whipping was given, has expired.² Indeed it is illegal to order a sentence of whipping to be inflicted on the prisoner at the time of his release from the jail.³ There is no provision of law under which an accused who has been released after having undergone his sentence of imprisonment could be called back to undergo the sentence of whipping.⁴ In such cases the sentence of whipping should be cancelled as having become inoperative.⁵

Where, again, an accused is sentenced on three separate convictions, first to a term of imprisonment, second to a certain number of lashes to be inflicted at the expiry of the period of imprisonment, and third to a term of imprisonment after whipping, the postponement of whipping to the expiry of the term of imprisonment under the first conviction is illegal and hence the second term of conviction will begin on the expiry of the first.⁶

A sentence of whipping not inflicted within the statutory period or within the period prescribed therefor, becomes inoperative.⁷

While Magistrates have no power to postpone the execution of sentence of whipping, they are also not entitled to inflict it before the expiry of the period specified in the section. Thus, where a Magistrate of the first class convicted an accused of theft and sentenced him to one month's rigorous imprisonment and twenty lashes, the District Magistrate took the case in revision and holding that whipping could not be added to imprisonment, directed the accused to be whipped and submitted the case for the orders of the Chief Court. The Chief Court held that the sentence being an appealable one to the Court of Session, the District Magistrate acted illegally in taking up the case in revision and directing the accused to be whipped, before the expiry of the period allowed for appeal.⁸

Where, however, an accused is convicted of two offences for one of which he is sentenced to imprisonment and for the other to whipping, it is not open to the Magistrate to postpone the sentence of whipping on the ground that the accused has preferred an appeal against the sentence of imprisonment.⁹ Before S. 390 was amended, it was not illegal to execute the sentence immediately when it was given as a separate sentence for a separate offence and not in addition to imprisonment.¹⁰ See also section 35 Note 9.

6. Double sentence of whipping. — Under the Whipping Act of 1864 it was held that when a person, who has been previously convicted within the meaning of S. 4 of that Act, is convicted at one time of two or more offences, he may be punished with one but only one whipping in addition to any other punishment to which under S. 46 of the Code of Criminal Procedure he may be liable.¹ The said S. 4 has been repealed, but it is submitted that under this section also it would not be legal to pass a double sentence of whipping. Thus, where an accused was convicted under Ss. 454 and 380, Penal Code, and was sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment and fifteen stripes

7. Whipping in addition to imprisonment for less than three months—Sub-section (3).—When the term of imprisonment to which the accused is sentenced is less than three months, it is illegal to award the sentence of whipping in addition to the imprisonment.¹

as the Local Government directs" and in the case of a person under sixteen years of age, it was to be inflicted "in the way of school-discipline with a light rattan." It also limited the number of lashes to one hundred and fifty, if whipping was inflicted with the cat-of-nine-tails and to thirty if it was inflicted with a rattan.

Section 392 of the Code of 1852 substituted the words "with a light rattan not less than half an inch in diameter," for the words "with such instrument" and further enacted that in no case shall the punishment of whipping exceed thirty stripes. Section 392 of the present Code has amended the portion relating to persons under sixteen years of age from "in the way of school-discipline with a light rattan" into "in such mode and on such part of the person and with such instrument as the Provincial Government directs" and S. 7 of Act IV of 1909 has added "and, in the case of a person under sixteen years of age, it shall not exceed fifteen stripes" to sub-section (2).

2. Mode of inflicting punishment on persons of or over sixteen years of age. — The mode of inflicting the said punishment and the part of the body on which it is to be inflicted have been left to be determined by the Provincial Government. The various Provincial Governments have provided as follows in this behalf :

Bengal :— The punishment of whipping should, in the case of an adult, be inflicted on the breech, with a rattan not exceeding half an inch in diameter; and on all occasions precautions should be taken to prevent the blows from falling on any other part of the person. (Wilkins, 148.)

Bombay :— In the case of a person of sixteen years of age, whipping shall, when inflicted in private, that is, within the precincts of prison, be inflicted on the bare buttocks, and when inflicted in public, that is, without the precincts of prison, across the bare-shoulders. (Bom. G. R. No. 608 of 1897.)

Madras :— In the case of a person of or over sixteen years of age, the whipping is to be inflicted on the posterior and care is to be taken that the person undergoing the punishment is tied up to a triangle, or his immobility under punishment is otherwise secured — in order to preclude the possibility of the rattan falling on any other part of the body. (Gaz. Not. No. 4, 1st Jan. 1883.)

A thin cloth soaked in antiseptic should be spread over prisoner's buttocks.

Punjab :— (1) It is to be inflicted on the buttocks with a rattan not more than four feet in length, and one and a half inches in circumference, not in public or in front of court-houses, but always within some walled enclosure and in the presence of a Magistrate or the Superintendent of the jail, and when practicable, of a Medical Officer. (Punjab Bk. Cir. Vol. 2 S. LV, p. 269). (2) The triangle should be boarded on the side next to the offender, so as to prevent the possibility of the rattan curling round and touching the front or any other part of his person. (3) The punishment is never to be inflicted in public, or in front of cutchery, but always within some walled enclosure, either the jail, lock-up, treasury or any other convenient place, and in presence of a Magistrate, and, when practicable, of a Medical Officer. Superintendents of jails have been invested by the Local Government with powers of a Magistrate of third class, with a view to sentences of whipping being executed in their presence. (Smyth 115. Gov. Beng., Feb. 29, 1864.)

United Provinces of Agra and Oudh :— The whipping shall be inflicted on the buttocks with a light rattan half an inch in diameter. (G. O. No. 1290, dated 12th May 1898.)

Central Provinces :— In the case of a person of or over sixteen years of age, the rattan shall be applied to the bare posterior, the offender being tied to a triangle and a leather apron fastened round his waist. (C. P. Gaz. Not. No. 20, 4th January 1899.)

See also the undermentioned case.¹

Burma :— The punishment of whipping shall be inflicted with a light rattan on the breech in the way of school-discipline. (Burma Gaz. Not. No. 193, dated 1st July 1898, Part I. page 307.)

It has been held illegal to inflict stripes on the hand.²

3. Mode of inflicting punishment on persons under sixteen years of age. — Under the Codes of 1872 and 1882, as seen in Note 1 above, the whipping was to be inflicted "in the way of school-discipline, in the case of persons under sixteen years of age." This phrase "in the way of school-discipline" was held to connote the degree of severity with which the punishment was to be inflicted.¹ Now that phrase has been omitted and the Provincial Government is empowered to prescribe the mode of punishment.² The several Provincial Governments have provided as follows :

Bombay :— In the case of a person under sixteen years of age, it shall be inflicted in private with a light rattan across the bare buttocks.

Madras :— In the case of juvenile offenders, a lighter cane than that employed for persons of or above sixteen years of age, shall be employed. (G. O. No. 59, Judicial, dated 10th January 1893.)

Punjab :— In the case of a person under sixteen years of age, it shall be inflicted on the buttocks in the way of school-discipline with a rattan not more than half an inch in diameter. (Not. No. 677, dated 16th May 1899; Punjab Gazette, 1899, part 1, p. 314.)

Central Provinces :— The whipping shall be inflicted on the bare-buttocks or in the case of a boy under twelve, on the hands, at the discretion of the Magistrate. The instrument used shall be a rattan lighter than that used for adults; and while the whipping is being administered, the prisoner shall be held, but not tied to a triangle or

4. Maximum sentence of whipping.—All the Codes have limited the maximum number of stripes to be inflicted with a rattan, to thirty. It is enacted that "in no case" shall this be exceeded. The question arises, if at the same time an accused is convicted of more than one offence, can he be sentenced to more than one sentence of whipping? Referring to S. 46 of the Criminal Procedure Code (in force at that time) Peacock, C. J., said:

"The Code of Criminal Procedure did not intend to allow two punishments of whipping to be inflicted at the same time for two offences, of which an offender might be convicted at the same time."

His Lordship said in reference to the Whipping Act, VI of 1864:

"I do not believe that it was intended to sanction such a cruelty as to allow a double flogging to be inflicted upon a prisoner convicted of two offences at the same time."¹

The words "in no case" in the Codes of 1872, 1882 and 1893 clearly show that at one time not more than thirty stripes should be inflicted and it has been so held² under these Codes. See also S. 391 Note 6.

1. Execution of whipping by instalments.—The sentence of whipping is not to be executed by instalments.¹ Therefore, no enhancement of the sentence of whipping can be made in revision after it has been executed, as it would amount to executing the sentence by instalments. Thus, where, an accused person convicted under S. 382, Penal Code, and sentenced to whipping was whipped and an application

2. Persons exempted from being punished with whipping.

— Section 7 of the Whipping Act, VI of 1864, provided as follows:

"No female shall be punished with the whipping nor shall any person who may be sentenced to death, or to transportation or to penal servitude, or to imprisonment for more than five years, be punished with whipping."

This section has in addition to these persons exempted such males as the Court considers to be more than 45 years of age.¹ The Burma Whipping Act, VIII of 1927, has extended the period of imprisonment from five to seven years for purposes of this exemption. Persons sentenced to transportation^{1a} or imprisonment² for seven years cannot be sentenced to whipping. Nor can women or persons under sentence of death be so sentenced.³ It is to be noted that the wording of this section "none of the following persons shall be punishable," as compared with the words in S. 391, sub-s. (3), "shall be sentenced" refers to the execution of the sentence of whipping and not to its being passed.⁴ However, a sentence, the execution of which is prohibited by law, is illegal and cannot be passed.⁵ The word "sentenced," in clause (b), it was argued, means "already sentenced" and does not refer to the sentence passed in combination with the sentence of whipping. This contention was rightly rejected⁶ and it was held that the word must be understood in a general sense and if a person is sentenced for any period exceeding that fixed by the Act, whether in conviction in one case, or more than one, he cannot be punished with whipping.⁷

394.* (1) The punishment of whipping shall not be inflicted unless a medical officer, if present, certifies, or, if there is not a medical officer present, unless it appears to the Magistrate or officer present, that the offender is in a fit state of health to undergo such punishment.

(2) If, during the execution of a sentence of whipping, a medical officer certifies, or it appears to the Magistrate or officer present, that the offender is not in a fit state of health to undergo the remainder of the sentence, the whipping shall be finally stopped.

1. Scope. — This section enacts that the sentence of whipping shall not be inflicted on an accused person unless a medical officer certifies, or in his absence, unless the Magistrate considers that the accused is in a fit state of health to undergo the punishment; and it should be finally stopped, if, during the course of its execution, it is found that the accused is not in a fit state of health to undergo the rest of the punishment. "A man, though sentenced to whipping, is not to be whipped unless in a fit state to suffer that punishment. The whipping is not to be commenced if he is unfit to bear it at all, and then he is to be kept in custody till the Court can revise the sentence. But, if it be commenced, it is not to be continued longer than the man is fit to bear it, and when the man has had all he can bear (in the opinion of the medical officer), the executioner is to stay his hand, and the sentence has been fully satisfied; for, it cannot be executed by instalments."¹ It may be noted that when a sentence of whipping has been executed in the presence of the Magistrate, Rule 287 of the Madras Criminal Rules of Practice, 1931, requires the Magistrate to record the fact of such execution.

This section deals with the execution of a sentence of whipping which has been already passed. Where the question is whether such a sentence should be passed, it has been held that a Magistrate should not reject the punishment of whipping merely on the ground that the accused is too young and frail unless he has medical opinion in support of his own.²

2. Certificate of the medical officer. — The medical officer can under sub-s. (1) certify, before the sentence is inflicted, that the accused is, or is not, in a fit state of health to undergo the punishment and under sub-s. (2) he can certify, during the execution of the sentence, that the accused cannot bear the rest of it. But it has been held that he is not empowered to certify, before the whipping is commenced, that the accused is fit to receive only a part of the sentence. Thus, where, before the whipping was inflicted, the medical officer certified that the accused could bear only six out of twenty lashes ordered to be inflicted on him, it was held that (a) the medical officer not being authorized to grant such a certificate before the execution of the sentence, it was not a valid certificate under sub-s. (1), and (b) the certificate, not having been granted during execution, was not a proper certificate under sub-s. (2). Hence, the Magistrate's action in inflicting six out of the twenty lashes and awarding three months' rigorous imprisonment in lieu of the fourteen lashes that were not inflicted was illegal and the imprisonment was set aside.¹ In such a case as this the accused should have been kept in custody with a view to revising the sentence of whipping under section 395.

395.* (1) In any case in which, under section 394, a sentence of whipping is, wholly or partially, prevented from being executed, the offender shall be kept in custody till the Court which passed the sentence can revise it; and the said Court may, at its discretion, either remit such sentence, or sentence the offender in lieu of whipping, or in lieu of so much of the sentence of whipping as was not executed, to imprisonment for any term not exceeding twelve months, or to a fine not exceeding five hundred rupees, which may be in addition to any other punishment to which he may have been sentenced for the same offence.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorize any Court to inflict imprisonment for a term or a fine of an amount exceeding that to which

1. Legislative changes.

Changes introduced in 1882 —

- (1) The words "order the discharge of the offender" in S. 313 of the Code of 1872 were substituted by the words "remit such sentence."
- (2) The words "to imprisonment for any period" in S. 313 were substituted by the words "to imprisonment for any period not exceeding twelve months."
- (3) The words "Provided that the whole period of imprisonment to which such offender is sentenced shall not exceed that to which he is liable by law, etc.," were altered into "Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorize any Court to inflict imprisonment for a term exceeding that to which the accused is liable by law, etc."

Amendments in 1923 —

The words "or to a fine not exceeding five hundred rupees," were added in sub-s. (1) between the words "twelve months" and "which may be, etc." and the words "or a fine of an amount" were added in sub-s. (2) between the words "for a term" and "exceeding that . . . etc," by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, 18 of 1923.

2. Scope and object of the section.—In cases where a sentence of whipping cannot be carried out at all, under sub-s. (1) of S. 394, because the accused is not in a fit state of health to undergo the punishment, or where it is carried out only in part, the accused not being in a state of health to undergo the rest of it,¹ this section requires the Court to keep the accused in custody with a view to revise the sentence of whipping. The sentence of whipping can be revised (a) either by remitting it, or, (b) by sentencing the accused to imprisonment for a term not exceeding twelve months in lieu of whipping, or, (c) by imposing a fine not exceeding five hundred rupees. It cannot be said that by reading S. 392, sub-s. (2) which fixes the maximum sentence of whipping at thirty stripes, with this section which fixes the maximum sentence of imprisonment that can be given in lieu of whipping at twelve months, that sentences of thirty stripes and twelve months' rigorous imprisonment are of equal degree of severity.² But it may be taken that the Legislature regarded a sentence of twelve months' imprisonment as the maximum sentence of imprisonment which could be substituted for whipping. Thus, it has been held by a Full Bench of the Rangoon High Court³ that a substitute of 30 stripes for a sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment is not an "enhancement" within the meaning of S. 423, sub-s. (1) (b). It has been seen in S. 394 that a medical officer cannot certify before the sentence of whipping is executed that the prisoner is in a fit state of health to undergo only a portion of the sentence. If such an illegal certificate is given and in pursuance of it the sentence is partially executed, the Magistrate is not entitled under this section to sentence the prisoner to imprisonment in lieu of the unexecuted portion of the sentence of whipping.⁴

3. Court which passed the sentence. — It is the Court that passed the sentence of whipping that can revise it.¹ This power to revise the sentence is not taken away by the sentence being confirmed in appeal.²

The words "Court which passed the sentence" do not mean the same officer who passed the original sentence of whipping. The word "Court" is impersonal, and its use instead of the words "Magistrate or officer" lends support to this view. Indeed, to confine the power of revision to the particular officer who passed the sentence would, in many cases, make the section unworkable. It certainly cannot be the intention of the Legislature, that, if at the time the sentence of whipping is to be revised under this section, the particular officer who passed the sentence of whipping is not available, he being either dead or transferred, the accused should escape the commuted sentence under this section. It has consequently been held that when the Magistrate who passed the sentence of whipping is absent, the District Magistrate can be held to be "the Court which passed the sentence."³

4. Power of revision of sentence. — As seen already, the sentence may either be remitted or imprisonment or fine inflicted in lieu of it. The Court has, however, no power to take a bond under S. 562 from the accused in lieu of it.¹ Before the amendment of this section in 1923, it was held that a sentence of fine cannot be passed in lieu of whipping.^{1a} Since the amendment, those cases are not good law and now fine not exceeding Rs. 500 can be levied.

Section 395.

The Court can remit the sentence altogether even though it is competent to inflict a term of imprisonment in lieu of whipping.² The word "imprisonment" means a substantive sentence of imprisonment and not imprisonment in default of payment of fine.³ Sub-section (2) enacts that where an accused is sentenced to whipping and imprisonment and where in lieu of such whipping imprisonment is inflicted, the total term of imprisonment should not exceed that which the Court is competent to inflict.⁴ Therefore, where imprisonment for the maximum period is inflicted in addition to whipping, the entire sentence of whipping should be remitted; for, any further sentence of imprisonment will be beyond the competency of the Court.⁵

Where the sentence of whipping that has been passed is illegal, as for example, on a person above forty-five years of age, the Magistrate is not competent to revise such illegal sentence.⁶ The illegal sentence should be reported to the High Court for orders. But, where at the time the sentence of whipping is passed, it is ordered that if the sentence cannot be executed, the accused shall undergo imprisonment, it has been held that the conditional sentence of imprisonment is illegal and the Magistrate should act under this section.⁷

5. Solitary confinement. — When imprisonment in lieu of whipping is awarded, solitary confinement may be ordered, though it is not specifically mentioned in the section.¹

shall, subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained, take effect immediately, and, if of imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation, shall take effect according to the following rules, that is to say:—

(2) If the new sentence is severer in its kind than the sentence which such convict was undergoing when he escaped, the new sentence shall take effect immediately.

(3) When the new sentence is not severer in its kind than the sentence the convict was undergoing when he escaped, the new sentence shall take effect after he has suffered imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation, as the case may be, for a further period equal to that which, at the time of his escape, remained unexpired of his former sentence.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section—

(a) a sentence of transportation or penal servitude shall be deemed severer than a sentence of imprisonment;

(b) a sentence of imprisonment with solitary confinement shall be deemed severer than a sentence of the same description of imprisonment without solitary confinement; and

(c) a sentence of rigorous imprisonment shall be deemed severer than a sentence of simple imprisonment with or without solitary confinement.

1. Legislative changes. — Section 316 of Act X of 1872 left it to the discretion of the Court to direct the sentence passed on an escaped convict to take effect immediately or after the expiration of the period of the imprisonment or transportation which the convict was undergoing at the time of his escape. But s. 396 of the Code of 1882 and the present section enact—(a) that the sentence of death, fine or whipping passed on an escaped convict shall be executed immediately and (b) the sentence of imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation shall be deferred or executed immediately, according as the new sentence is lighter or severer in quality than the sentence which the convict was undergoing at the time of his escape.

2. Escaped convict. — The word “convict” shows that the case of a person who escapes from custody while under trial is excluded from the operation of the section. There is a difference of opinion on the question if a person detained in custody for the purpose of giving security for good behaviour is not in custody for an offence though his detention may be lawful. Some cases have held that it is not a “sentence” of imprisonment though the detention is lawful, and that his conviction under s. 224, Penal Code, is illegal.¹ Other cases have held that the word “sentence” applies also to an order of imprisonment passed under s. 123, in default of furnishing security.² It is submitted that the former view is correct having regard to the use of the word convict. The place of trial under s. 224, Penal Code, for an escaped convict is the place from where he escaped. Trial and conviction by a Magistrate of another district will be quashed.³

3. Sentence. — The punishment under s. 224, Penal Code, for escaping from lawful custody is to be in addition to the original sentence and the Court in passing such sentence must comply with the provisions of this section.¹

4. Execution of sentence. — As far as the sentence of imprisonment, transportation or penal servitude is concerned, the principle of this section is that the severer in kind of the two sentences shall take effect immediately and the lighter deferred. Thus, when a life-convict under sentence of transportation was convicted under s. 224 of the Penal Code and sentenced to four months’ rigorous imprisonment, it was held that it was illegal to give priority to the sentence of rigorous imprisonment as the transportation is a severer punishment than imprisonment.¹ Similarly, where an accused under sentence of transportation for seven years escaped from where he was confined before transportation, and was convicted and sentenced to two years’ rigorous

1. Legislative changes.

Changes introduced in 1872 —

There was no provision in the Code of 1861 as to how a sentence of transportation on an offender already undergoing a sentence of transportation, was to take effect. This was provided for in the Code of 1872, but in other respects there was no difference between the two Codes.

Changes introduced in 1882 —

- (1) The Code of 1872 referred only to sentences of imprisonment and transportation. The sentence of penal servitude was also added in 1892.

Section 397

- (2) The proviso to S. 317 of the Code of 1872 was enacted as a separate section in 1892, namely S. 308.

Changes introduced in 1898 —

There were no changes introduced in 1898.

Changes introduced by Act XVIII of 1923 —

- (1) The words "unless previous sentence" were newly added. See Note 3.
- (2) The second proviso was newly added. See Note 5.

2. Several sentences — Execution of. — The general principle is that sentences should take effect immediately on conviction and cannot be postponed.¹ In cases, however, where several sentences are passed against the same person, the Code has enacted a different rule, namely, that such sentences should run consecutively; the one after the expiration of the other, unless the Court directs that they should run concurrently.² Section 35 enacts this rule, where a person is convicted at one trial of several offences and several sentences are given. This section enacts the rule, where a person already undergoing a sentence is sentenced to imprisonment, etc.³

3. "Unless the Court directs concurrently with such previous sentence." — Before the amendment of the Code in 1923, S. 35 enabled a Magistrate, in a case where several sentences were passed at one trial, to order that the punishments shall run concurrently.¹ But there was no such provision (except in one particular specified) in this section, and it was consequently held in cases not falling within S. 35 that the Court had no power to order that the sentences should run concurrently.^{1a} The addition of the words "unless the Court directs

3a. Whipping—Concurrent sentences of. — See Note 12 to Section 35.

3b. Imprisonment in default of payment of fine if can be made concurrent. — Section 64 of the Penal Code lays down that a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine should be in excess of any other imprisonment to which the accused may have been sentenced. This implies that a sentence of imprisonment in default is not a sentence of imprisonment within the meaning of S. 35 of the Code¹ or of this section.² It has, therefore, been held in the under-mentioned cases,³ decided under S. 35 that sentences of imprisonment in default cannot be ordered to run concurrently. Following this view, the High Court of Lahore⁴ has held in a case coming under this section that it is illegal to make various sentences of imprisonment in default of payment of fine awarded in separate trials concurrent with each other. In Emperor v. Punjabi Lalaji,⁵ the High Court of Bombay has, however, held that the word 'imprisonment' in this section includes imprisonment in default of payment of fine and that, therefore, where a person undergoing a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine is sentenced to a substantive term of imprisonment, the latter sentence will begin to run only on the expiry of the imprisonment for default.

4. "Already undergoing a sentence of imprisonment," etc.

— A is sentenced on the same day to two separate terms of imprisonment on two separate convictions. Can A be said, at the moment the second sentence is passed, to be undergoing a sentence of imprisonment in respect of the first sentence? It was held by the High Court of Allahabad, in a case arising before the amendment of 1923, that he cannot, the reason being that a person cannot be said to undergo a sentence of imprisonment until he is actually put in jail.¹ It was, however, held in the same case following the undermentioned case^{1a} of the Bombay High Court that where several sentences were passed on the same day, they might be considered to have been passed at one trial within the meaning of S. 35 and that, therefore, the Court could order the sentences to run concurrently. The High Courts of Madras and Rangoon and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur have, on the other hand held that a person sentenced to imprisonment must be deemed to be undergoing that imprisonment within the meaning of this section from the moment the sentence is passed and that, therefore, this section will apply.²

A person who has furnished security under S. 108 of the Code and is subsequently convicted under S. 500 of the Penal Code, cannot be said to be undergoing any sentence of imprisonment at the time the sentence under S. 500 is passed, though after such conviction the accused withdraws his security and is consequently committed to prison.³

A person undergoing a sentence of imprisonment in a foreign territory will, for the purposes of this section, be considered to be "undergoing the sentence" and consequently, a Magistrate is competent to direct that a sentence passed by him should commence after the expiration of the sentence which the accused is undergoing in the foreign territory.⁴

second proviso to this section in 1923, there was a difference of opinions as to whether an order for commitment to prison under S. 123 in default of furnishing security was a sentence of imprisonment within the meaning of this section. On the one hand, it was held that it was not¹ and that the subsequent sentence could not, therefore, under this section, be postponed till after the expiry of the imprisonment ordered under S. 123.² The High Court of Allahabad held, on the other hand, that a commitment under S. 123 is a sentence of imprisonment within the meaning of this section and that, consequently, the subsequent sentence for an offence would, under this section, commence after the expiry of the imprisonment under S. 123.³ By the addition, in 1923, of the second proviso to this section and the use therein of the words "sentenced to imprisonment by an order under S. 123," the Legislature has adopted the view of the Allahabad High Court that the words "sentence of imprisonment" include an order for commitment to prison under S. 123⁴ but has enacted that, where the subsequent sentence is for an offence committed prior to the order under S. 123,

Where the subsequent sentence is for an offence committed after the order under S. 123, this proviso has no application. In such cases the first paragraph of this section will come into operation and the subsequent sentence will run after the expiry of the sentence under S. 123 unless the Court directs that they shall run concurrently.⁵ The proviso will not also apply where the order under section 123 is passed subsequent to a sentence of imprisonment for an offence and, in such cases also, it is submitted, the first paragraph of this section applies and the sentences will run only consecutively. A contrary view has, however, been taken by a Full Bench of the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind.^{5a} In that case X was sentenced to imprisonment for an offence, after the date of an order for security and before the date fixed for furnishing security. On failure to furnish security on the latter date an order under S. 123 was not passed but was suspended until the expiry of the sentence for the offence. It was held by their Lordships, firstly, that the order under S. 123 could not be suspended and secondly, the imprisonment under S. 123 would run concurrently with the previous imprisonment. As has been seen before, this latter view is not correct. Where after an order for security was passed X was convicted of an offence and sentenced to imprisonment and thereafter an order under S. 123 for imprisonment was passed for default of security, it was held by the High Court of Bombay that the order under S. 123 should not have been passed on a later date at all and that on the assumption that the order under S. 123 was on the date of the order for security as it should have been, the subsequent sentence for the offence ran concurrently with the former.⁶

When the sentence for the offence is fine, S. 64 of the Penal Code requires that any imprisonment in default of the payment of fine should be in excess of any other imprisonment to which the accused may be sentenced. Hence, in such cases, even though the offence in question may have been committed prior to the passing of the order under S. 123, the effect of S. 64 of the Penal Code would be to postpone the imprisonment in default of fine till the expiration of the imprisonment in default of security.⁷

6. Detention in civil prison, if "sentence of imprisonment."

— The detention in civil prison is not a sentence of imprisonment within the meaning of this section. Where therefore a person undergoing detention in a civil jail is convicted of an offence and sentenced to a term of imprisonment, this section has no application and the sentence will commence, under the general principle of law, from the

6a. Detention under Madras Borstal Schools Act, if can be made consecutive. — This section does not apply to sentences of detention under S's of the Madras Borstal Schools Act. Consequently, a direction in a case that the sentence of detention should commence after the expiration of the previous sentence of detention is illegal.¹

7. Effect of reversal of one of two sentences in appeal. — Where x is convicted and sentenced to imprisonment first in one case and subsequently in another, and the former conviction is reversed in appeal, it has been held by the High Court of Bombay that the second sentence will commence from the date of such reversal.¹ According to the High Court of Madras, the sentence already undergone in respect of the conviction which was set aside should be reckoned as imprisonment in the second conviction.² The Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind has held that the second sentence will commence only on the date of the acquittal in appeal in respect of the first conviction, but that the High Court has power under S.439 of the Code, to reduce, on equitable considerations, the second sentence by the period of imprisonment already undergone by the accused.³

8. Transportation — First proviso. — Where an accused who is already undergoing a sentence of imprisonment is sentenced to transportation, the Court has got a discretion under the first proviso to direct the sentence of transportation to commence immediately or after the expiration of the sentence of imprisonment.¹ If no order is made directing it to commence immediately, the sentence of transportation will commence only after the expiry of the sentence of imprisonment.² Where, however, at the time the sentence of transportation is passed, the Magistrate is ignorant of the previous sentence of imprisonment, an order directing the sentence of transportation to commence immediately can be made later on.³ By the amendment of sub-s.(1) this discretion has been given even in the case of a subsequent sentence of imprisonment or penal servitude. The first proviso, therefore, appears to be redundant and unnecessary. Where a person already sentenced to transportation for life is for the second time sentenced to transportation, this section has been held not to apply though, for purposes of calculation, a sentence of transportation for life is reckoned as 20 years.⁴ It may be noted, in passing, that transportation cannot be ordered in default of payment of fine.⁵

9. Sentence cannot be ante-dated. — A sentence cannot be made to operate from a date prior to the date on which the sentence was passed. Thus, where a prisoner was arrested on 27-1-1931 and was convicted and sentenced on 8-4-1931, it was held that the sentence could not be made to run from 27-1-1931.¹

10. Order as to commencement of sentence is not a judgment. — An order made by a Court under this section as to the commencement of sentences is not a part of its judgment and may, therefore, be made after the judgment is signed.¹

11. Power of High Court to pass concurrent sentences. — The High Court has power, under this section, to pass concurrent sentences in the same manner as the Court which originally passes the sentences.¹

12. Appeal. — Where an accused is sentenced to concurrent terms of imprisonment, no one of which alone is appealable, he is not entitled to appeal against them collectively.¹ Likewise when an Assistant Sessions Judge sentences an accused to imprisonment for a period not exceeding four years, under each of two sections of the Penal Code, directing the sentences to run concurrently, an appeal lies to the Sessions Court and not to the High Court.²

(2) When an award of imprisonment in default of payment of a fine is annexed to a substantive sentence of imprisonment, or to a sentence of transportation or penal servitude for an offence punishable with imprisonment, and the person undergoing the sentence is after its execution to undergo a further substantive sentence, or further substantive sentences of imprisonment, transportation or penal servitude, effect shall not be given to the award of imprisonment in default of payment of the fine until the person has undergone the further sentence or sentences.

1. Scope of the section. — This section provides that no person will be excused from undergoing any part of the punishment to which he is liable under former or subsequent convictions.¹

Where an accused was convicted under S. 447, Penal Code, and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for three months and a fine, in default of payment of which he was sentenced to imprisonment for twenty days and the substantive sentence was by some mistake overlooked with the result that the accused served only the sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine, and was released, it was held that the accused could be re-arrested and sent to jail to serve the substantive sentence and the substantive sentence could be directed to begin from the date of his re-arrest.²

2. Sub-section (2). — This sub-section was first introduced in the Code of 1898. It supersedes the view held in the undermentioned case¹ that where a convict is imprisoned under two warrants which order consecutive punishments, the first warrant should be completely executed, both in respect of the substantive sentence of imprisonment and the imprisonment in default of fine, before any effect is given to the second warrant. Where a person is already undergoing a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine when a substantive sentence of imprisonment is passed against him, an order directing that the subsequent sentence should take effect immediately and that the unexpired portion of the prior sentence should begin to run on the expiry of the subsequent sentence, is not justified under this sub-section. The reason is that this sub-section only provides for the postponement of the imprisonment in default and not for its interruption.²

1. Scope of the section. — This section may be compared with S. 562. The points of difference are as follows :

- (1) This section applies to offenders below the age of 15 years, while S. 562 applies to all offenders.
- (2) Under this section the offender need not be a first offender, whereas under S. 562 the offender must be a first offender.
- (3) In order that this section may apply, the offender must be sentenced to imprisonment.¹ Under S. 562, the Court may, instead of sentencing him, release him on probation.
